TORONTO — There's good news and bad news for fans of Yiddish among younger members of the Jewish community.

The good news is that 13 students of high school age registered for a credit course in Yiddish, 10 more than ever before.

But the bad news is that the course will not be held unless 20 students sign up for it before Oct. 10.

The course, at a beginnner, intermediate and advanced level, is given at Earl Haig Collegiate in North York Tuesday evenings from 6 to 9 p.m. There is no charge.

Adults are no longer eligible for the course because of budget restrictions, but they are welcome to attend a three-level Yiddish conversation course for two hours at the same location on Monday evenings.

The credit course explores Yiddish language, literature, film, music and culture, and is taught by Sheine Mankovsky and Elie Moidel.

More than half the students who registered are graduates of Bialik Jewish Day School and took Yiddish from grades 3 to 8 as part of their curriculum. They are now attending CHAT, where Yiddish is not offered as part of the core curriculum. The other registrants are from other high schools in the Greater Toronto Area.

Those who registered have been asked to publicize the course among fellow students to bring in the required number.

For information, call the Committee for Yiddish, Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto, 416-635-2883, ext. 155.

We fervently hope

The agreement signed last week in Washington between Israel and the Palestinian Authority acknowledges the sublimity of lofty aspiration. But its content and structure demonstrate, above all else, a deep understanding of the paramount significance of details, of enshrining the pragmatics of an untried day-to-day coexistence between two troubled, anxious and contending peoples.

The document is 400 pages of articles, annexes and appendices. It was described by Serge Schemann of the New York Times as "a combination of grand hopes and minute detail." It describes an ongoing process of separation in which the Palestinians, for the time being, gain autonomy but not sovereignty. Israel cedes administrative control but retains a tight hold on security.

The official summary says: "The main object of the Interim Agreement is to broaden Palestinian self-government in the West Bank...This will allow the Palestinians to conduct their own internal affairs...and open a new era of cooperation and coexistence based on common interest, dignity and mutual respect. At the same time, it protects Israel's vital interests and in particular its security interests, both with regard to external security as well as the personal security of its citizens in the West Bank."

And so we fervently hope and pray.

To be sure, moving forward in the manner outlined in the complex and complicated agreement is fraught with uncertainty and risk. But standing still is even more dangerous.

To truly achieve peace will require more than negotiations with the Palestinian leaders. It will require a reasonable level of confidence in the process. This will mean Yasser Arafat gaining the confidence of the people of Israel. In light of the widening rift within Israeli society, it will also mean the government of Israel trying, to the extent that it can, to gain the confidence of the people who feel most threatened by the process.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin has clearly stated that the ultimate objective of the negotiations "is not a greater Land of Israel containing two nations, but rather a Jewish state within the majority of the area of the Land of Israel, whose capital is a united Jerusalem 'plus,' whose security border is the Jordan River and the Jordan valley; and alongside which is a Palestinian entity which Israel does not have to rule over."

The word peace appears in the Bible 237 times. It is more than lofty aspiration; it is essence itself. King David encapsulated its urgency, very simply and elegantly: "Seek peace and pursue it." (Psalms 24:16). The attempt to negotiate peace must be given a chance.

Delusion too

Last week we examined Premier Jacques Parizeau's referendum rhetoric concerning what he has called the inevitability of an economic partnership between an independent Quebec and an independent Canada. It was an example of the specious claims, "delusions bordering on deceit," which he cavalierly tends to fob off as fact. This week we examine another of his dubious assertions, namely, that Quebecers will be able to keep their Canadian passports in addition to the newly-engraved Quebec one.

A passport is proof of citizenship, the tangible and visible testament to the "contract" between citizen and state. Like all contracts, citizenship bestows benefits and rights but also imposes burdens and responsibilities.

By voting Yes in the referendum, Quebecers would be rejecting Canada as no longer worthy of their political, social, civic and constitutional loyalties. They would be casting off as so much unwanted baggage the burdens and responsibilities that citizens of the same country must share with one another. Thus unburdened, they should not at the same time expect to receive the rights and benefits of being Canadian.

The Montreal Gazette termed Parizeau's passport claim as "absurd." It is that and much more. To claim entitlement to the benefits while disavowing the burdens offends both conscience and fairness. By tearing up the country, they tear up the "contract," and with it its symbol – the passport.

WISDOM OF THE AGES:

Peace embraces all the good in the world and there is no limit to its benefits.

Jewish mothers are not to blame

CHUM-AM newscaster Brian Henderson's commentary constituted a vile and dangerous form of anti-Semitism. He takes the funding of legal aid, which is a significant financial commitment of the Province of Ontario (and thus contributes to the province's deficit), and chooses to lay the blame on Jewish mothers. He also uses the opportunity to tell us that there are somehow too many Jewish doctors and dentists. His entire thrust is that these people are in it to earn a "good living" and a "decent income." Why are the financial aspects of these professionals being emphasized rather than their talents, education, hard work and contribution to society? Maybe they are actually underpaid for the responsiblities they assume and the results they deliver. Isn't that what usually happens in a capitalist society when there is the oversupply that Henderson claims?

Henderson then broadens his anti-Semitism to question both the competence and ethics of the Jewish lawyer. He exploits his writing talents to be not just an anti-Semite, but a skilful one.

What's next? Is the root cause of the funding crisis in education Jewish mothers teaching their children the importance of knowledge? Is the root cause of the funding crisis in welfare Jewish mothers teaching their children about social justice? Bravo to the many Jewish and other mothers who challenge their children to diligently use their talents and opportunities to aspire to the professions Henderson enumerates and many others.

Jewish lawyers used as scapegoats

The recent statements made by Brian Henderson and Dick Smyth concerning Jewish lawyers and Jews in general were both insulting and offensive. Irresponsible remarks such as those made by Henderson and Smyth must be attacked by all responsible people. I do not even know what "disproportionate number of Jews in the legal profession" necessarily means, or whether or not it is correct in purely mathematical terms. However, this is not even the real issue.

To begin with, we live in a democracy, where a person's abilities, skills and desires, and not their race, color, gender or religion, dictate their chosen profession. It was outright prejudice and racism of the meanest character when these radio broadcasters used Jews as practising lawyers as a scapegoat for the decay of the Legal Aid System. There may be some Jewish lawyers amongst those that abused the system; however, this does not impugn the entire Jewish people and Jewish lawyers in particular. How fortunate for our Canadian society are the distinguished careers of the late Chief Justice Boris Laskin, his son John Laskin, the Hon. Charles Dubin, Messrs. Edward and Brian Greenspan, Clayton Ruby and Alan Borovoy, to name only a few.

Perhaps most galling was the egregious way that Smyth attempted to legitimate his remarks by cloaking his offensive racism with the misstatement that he is speaking the "truth."

People who have the ear of the public have a responsibility to discharge their duties honestly and professionally. There is no place in journalism for xenophobic, myopic people such as Smyth and Henderson. If there cannot be an unequivocal apology from both themselves and their management, then all responsible citizens must find a means to invoke sanctions not only against these individuals but against the stations for which they work.

Hebron's role in Jewish history

In response to Sheldon Kirshner's article (CJN, Sept. 21), entitled "Impasse emerges over Hebron," I would like to make the following comments.

Until last March, I was totally unaware of the historical and religious importance of Hebron to the Jewish people, and your cavalier attitude about the fact that Hebron is the most serious single impediment to the peace process, rankles. I am not sure if you have ever visited Hebron, but I am sure as a media person you do not live in a vacuum and must be aware of the Arafat tapes, where Yasser Arafat is seen exhorting his followers, the latest being young girls, to sacrifice their bodies for all of Palestine. What do you think that means — that they want to live in peace with us? I think if we pay very careful attention to our history we will come to the right conclusions.

Applaud 'Oslo 2' signing

As we observe the beginning of the Jewish New Year we are particularly pleased to celebrate the recent signing of Oslo 2. Hopefully this is a major step towards the completion of a full Israeli-Palestinian peace agreement. The peace process is admittedly a year behind schedule and terrorist actions have continued to take innocent lives and to jeopardize the ertheless, we applaud the Government of Israel for its determination and courage in continuing to move towards a just and lasting peace. This is our only hope for generations to come.

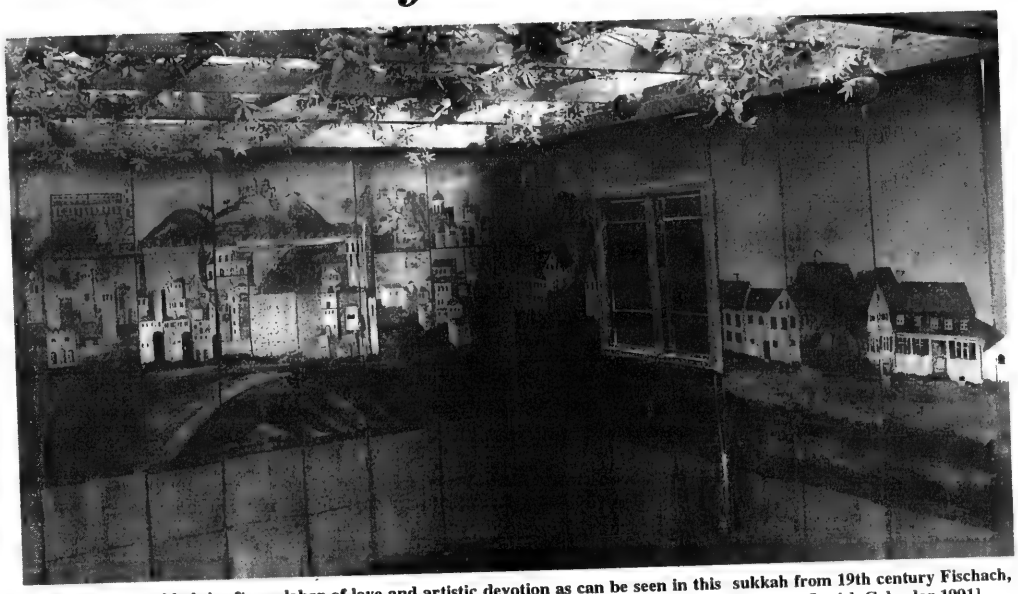
Sukkot — the time of our happiness

By RABBI JAY H. KELMAN



Decorating the sukkah is often a labor of love and artistic devotion as can be seen in this sukkah from 19th century Fischach, Germany. The walls portray elaborate, painstakingly detailed scenes of Jerusalem. [Photo from the Jewish Calendar 1991]

Five days after Yom Kippur we begin the celebration of the holiday of Sukkot. One question that one often hears (especially from employers) is: Why do we have so many holidays in the fall? Is it just a coincidence that Sukkot follows the High Holy Day period or is there some thematic connection? In order to properly analyze various approaches to this problem, we must understand what the holiday of Sukkot is all about.

The holiday of what we call Sukkot is really made up of two distinct holidays: Sukkot and Shemini Atzeret (which incorporates the festival of Simchat Torah, which was instituted much later in history).

Sukkot itself is made up of two distinct components — that of sukkah and that of the four species. These two aspects focus on two distinct parts of the holiday which at first glance even appear contradictory. When we take the lulav, etrog, hadas and aravah (the four species), we are giving thanks to G-d for all our material blessings, which in the agricultural society that was prevalent, was most readily apparent at harvest time. Hence the holiday of Sukkot is also known as Chag Haasif or the harvest festival and is most appropriately celebrated in the fall.

The other aspect of Sukkot is the mitzvah of living in a sukkah for seven days. We have to give up the material comforts of our "permanent home." Our home for the duration of Sukkot, the temporary structure of the sukkah, is invalidated if it has a permanent roof. Our homes are not foolproof sanctuaries and by living in the sukkah, we realize that the human condition is frail and we can not escape the elements that surround us. It is only because of inclement weather conditions in Canada that we are exempt from sleeping in the sukkah.

The Torah tells us that we sit in the sukkah in order to remember the fact that G-d took us out of Egypt. The connection between a sukkah and leaving Egypt is not readily apparent and is a matter of Talmudic debate. One view maintains that it symbolizes the actual huts the Jews lived in during their sojourn in the desert. If that is the case, we have to explain why Sukkot is in the fall. The Jews were in the desert during the winter, summer and spring as well. To this problem the traditional response has been that had Sukkot been in the summer, we would not know that one is sitting in their sukkah for the purpose of fulfilling a divine command. It is only because one builds a "summer hut" as the weather begins to turn cool that it is obvious that we sit in the sukkah in order to fulfil a mitzvah.

Additionally, human nature is such that when times are good we tend to relegate G-d to the background. We think we alone are responsible for our successes. Therefore, it is at harvest time, when we enjoy our material blessing, that we must be cognizant of the fact that all our blessings come from G-d. We leave our homes that we have "built" through our hard work and live in the temporary dwelling of the sukkah. This will hopefully lead to greater appreciation of the blessings we do have. We are reminded that life is only temporary and we must make good use of it.

It would appear that there is also a thematic connection for Sukkot following so closely on the heels of Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur. The overriding theme of Rosh Hashanah is one of anointing G-d as our King. This is the reason why the chazzan for Shacharit begins davening aloud with the word Hamelech (the King), which is in the middle of a sentence. After we acknowledge and accept G-d as our King, we are ready on Yom Kippur to purify ourselves before G-d and ask for forgiveness.

We are required to leave the physical world by abstaining from physical pleasure and to try to develop our spiritual dimensions. By rising to new spiritual heights, we merit atonement and have a sense of joy and a feeling of coming closer to G-d. In fact, the Mishna tells us that Yom Kippur is one of the two happiest days of the year (the other being the 15th day of the month of Av). Though modern people find this concept difficult, there is happiness though there is no physical pleasure.

It is Sukkot, though, that is known as Z'man Simchatenu, the time of our happiness. Here the emphasis is on physical joy. We are commanded to eat meat and drink wine. These are outward expressions of the inner happiness that we are commanded to feel. It is one thing to come close to G-d through prayers but quite another to feel the presence of G-d through our material blessing. We do, after all, spend most of our time in the physical, material world represented by Sukkot and when we feel close to G-d while living in this world, it really is a time for happiness. But this level of recognition can only come after we recognize G-d as ruler of the world and purify ourselves.

Maimonides, the great medieval codifier of Jewish law, records the laws of the shofar and the laws of Sukkot in one unit. This classification when examined superficially seems quite strange: If the laws of shofar are to be combined, one would expect them to be combined with the laws of Yom Kippur not those of Sukkot. Apparently, based on the Rambam's thinking, the shofar on Rosh Hashanah and the lulav and sukkah both reflect similar themes.

According to rabbinic tradition, the shofar represents (amongst other themes) our acceptance of G-d as King of the world. It is our 21-gun salute. Similarly, the waving of the lulav in different directions is an act of testimony to our acceptance that G-d rules the four corners of the world. The sukkah represents the protection the king gives us. The life of Jews has even been compared to the existence of a sukkah, living only temporarily in our adopted homes while the winds of persecution attempted to blow us away.

The recognition of G-d as King of the universe is meaningful only if the Jewish people are united in this fact. Throughout the davening of the High Holy Day period we speak of Jews coming together and crowning G-d as our King.

The rabbis teach us that the four species represent four types of Jews, ranging from those who are both knowledgeable and practising Jews to those who are both ignorant and even apathetic about their Judaism. Yet the four species must be brought together and all are invalidated if one is missing. If we do not make sure that all Jews, even non practising ones, can still be part of the community, then our Jewish way of life is somewhat deficient.

The High Holy Day period is in essence made up of days of individual reflection. The notion of tshuvah requires each person to give an honest appraisal of how they can improve themselves. The emphasis is on the individual. The focus of the High Holy Days is not in commemorating an historic event in Jewish history. On Sukkot we move from the individual to the community. One of the reasons given in the Talmud for the obligation to dwell in the sukkah is that it represents the clouds of glory that surrounded the Jewish people as they wandered in the dessert. Here the Jewish people marched as a community on their way to receive the Torah and then to the Land of Israel.

On Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, we strive to improve our moral being and thereby come closer to G-d. On Sukkot, we realize that religious principles apply in the material world and bear upon the individual as a member of the community. We spend the better part of this three-week period refining our relationships to ourselves, our families and our communities. We thereby begin the season by cementing our relationship with G-d, and continue to develop our perspective on our possessions and ourselves as members of the community.

After Sukkot, we can only anticipate the long and cold winter. Before we start our long period without holidays, we have another holiday, that of Shemini Atzeret. The relationship with G-d has been going so well, let's stay together for another day. As we feel the presence of G-d in all our daily activities, G-d feels close to us and wants us to celebrate another holiday together. Hence Shemini Atzeret, which is a separate and distinct holiday that focuses on the mitzvah of simchah, which can be imprecisely translated as being happy — the happiness that comes from coming closer to G-d. Shemini Atzeret became the natural time to complete and more importantly start anew the reading of the Torah. The Torah is the method of communication between G-d and man. By studying and practising it, we respond to and incorporate G-d into our lives. This is true "simchat Torah."

This essay concludes the trilogy written by Rabbi Kelman on the pilgrimage festivals, Pesach, Shavuot and Sukkot.

Opinions

U.S. Jews' attitudes to Israel

I was in Israel when the American Jewish Committee's recent survey of American Jews' attachment to Israel and their views on issues surrounding the Arab-Israeli peace process was published. The survey received fairly extensive coverage in the local media. Needless to say, each side in the Israeli debate on the peace process interpreted the findings in support of its position.

By Shira Herzog

On the peace process, the survey's main finding was that a substantial majority — 68 per cent — continued to endorse "the Israeli government's current handling of the peace negotiations with the Arabs." This compared to 77 per cent in August 1994, and 84 per cent in September 1993, immediately following the signing of the Oslo accords.

Opposition spokespersons in Israel were quick to point to the decline in support as yet another indication of the government's mishandling of the talks. Government spokespersons, in turn, took comfort in the solid base of support for their direction. They explained the decline in support as natural in a group that receives most of its information through the media, who report largely on the negative, often tragic fallout of the talks. They argued that American Jews are removed, for the most part, from the new reality of Israel as an international hub of business and increasing foreign investment. The "peace dividend," they said, is felt only in Israel, and not thousands of miles away.

Much ink will likely be spilled on analyses of the findings and the occasional contradictions and nuances hidden therein. At the end of the day, Israelis in government and opposition may endeavor to capitalize on these, but they all know that the true battle for hearts and minds is being waged inside Israel. And in Israel, the mood of the people was best captured in a survey recently done by Haifa University on Israeli perceptions of Yasser Arafat. Fifty-three per cent of those polled said that Arafat was a terrorist and the enemy. At the same time, 73 per cent said that the government should continue the negotiations with him. This poll, too, can be interpreted positively by either side.

In reality, this poll tells what other polls have already shown. The public mood is volatile and Israelis can hold apparently contradictory positions. They are not completely convinced by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin that he is on the right track, and they are not convinced by Benjamin Netanyahu that Rabin is wrong. The next election will boil down to a choice between these two men for the position of prime minister.

More disturbing, perhaps, in the American poll, was the apparent inconsistency between sentiment and knowledge among U.S. Jews. Of those polled, 78 per cent "agreed" with the statement that "caring about Israel is a very important part of being Jewish." Seventy-nine per cent said that they follow the news about Israel "closely" or "somewhat closely." Sixty-nine per cent said they feel "close" or "somewhat close" to Israel. And yet 53 per cent said they were "not sure" if Netanyahu and Shimon Peres were in the same party (seven per cent said they were in the same party). Forty-seven per cent of respondents did not know that 1948 was the year in which Israel declared its independence. Sixty-four per cent of respondents did not know that 1967 was the year in which Israel took control of the West Bank. Sixty-three per cent of respondents said they had never been to Israel. Twenty-two per cent said they had been there once, and 15 per cent said they had been there more than once.

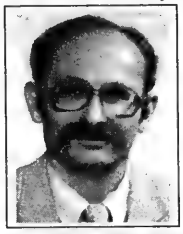
Behind the numbers lies a reality that gives pause for concern. A representative sample of 1,000 may not provide conclusive evidence, but it is a reliable indicator of trends. If the basics are not known, and if a majority of those who claim they care deeply about Israel have not been there, to what extent are their opinions based on myths or facts? To what extent have communities internalized an attachment to Israel that is not based on actually touching the country and its people? How equipped are they to enter into a new era in the relationship with Israel that will not be based to the same degree (no matter which government is in power there) on the external, existential threat to the country?

Other responses notwithstanding, an interesting finding was buried in one of the survey's questions: When asked "How important would you say being Jewish is in your life?" 59 per cent of respondents said "very important," 32 per cent "fairly important," and eight per cent "not very important." Asked about the qualities they consider most important to their Jewish identity, 51 per cent indicated "being part of the Jewish people," 17 per cent "religious observance," 17 per cent "a commitment to social justice," two per cent(!) "support for Israel," and 12 per cent "something else."

All pollsters will confirm that the wording and order of questions will yield varying results. Nevertheless, the August 1995 poll tells a story of a fluid relationship that is undergoing changes. These will pose new challenges for community leaders and members alike.

Free speech and offensive speech

At the University of British Columbia (UBC), allegations of racism and sexism have been directed at the Political Science Faculty. Admissions to the graduate program have been suspended. Some students have demanded modifications to the curriculum to include greater emphasis on feminist perspectives, the hiring of more women and the re-education of white male professors allegedly guilty of insensitivity or harassment.



By Morton Weinfeld

In Quebec, the head of the Conseil de la langue française, Marcel Masse, was accused by B'nai Brith and the Canadian Jewish Congress of racism and xenophobia. Masse had suggested that a narrow No victory in the Quebec referendum could lead to a backlash against non-francophones.

And in Toronto, two radio commentators have been accused of anti-Semitism. One had complained that many Jewish mothers push their children into law school, and he had linked that to the cuts in Legal Aid. A second commentator, defending the first, claimed that in truth Jews in Toronto seemed to be "disproportionately" represented in professions such as law and medicine.

At UBC, there may well have been cases of sexual and racial harassment by some professors. University administrations in Canada have been lax in their investigation and punishment of guilty parties in such cases. But the wholesale condemnation of the Political Science Department is seen by many liberal academics as too harsh. And few would abide by the kind of student-led control of the curriculum or the teaching process being sought.

I have periodically taught my students selections from Mein Kampf to illustrate anti-Semitic themes. That may well have offended some students. In my public policy seminars, I generally include readings from both sides of policy debates; since these are often controversial issues, someone is bound to be "offended." As a rule, vigorous free speech may often be offensive.

What of Masse's comments? Taken on the surface, I find them reasonable conjectures. I suspect many No supporters, including Jews, might agree that such a backlash is a possibility. If Masse made the comment to scare allophones and anglophones to vote Yes, it clearly did not work. I know nothing about Masse's personal attitudes towards non-francophones, and cannot speculate as to his motives in making the comment. But clearly, the more Masse and others repeat this "possibility" the more they may plant the seed in the public mind and create a self-fulfilling prophecy.

The third case is more troubling. The first comment, about Jewish mothers and Legal Aid, is stupid or malicious or a poor attempt at humor. The second caused pain because of the use of the term "disproportionately." That term has connotations of deviousness and unfairness, and taps into an old stereotype of Jewish lawyers as being unethical. The fact that Paul Bernardo's lawyer, John Rosen, has been fighting for his Legal Aid reimbursements has also raised the visibility of "Jewish lawyers" in the Toronto scene. Jews were also "disproportionately" represented as lawyers and in other professions in Weimar Germany ...

Yet there is no doubt that Jews are statistically represented in excess of their population percentages in many of the free professions in Canada and throughout North America. I have often discussed that point in my classes.

How to distinguish legitimate free speech from speech that is racist or hurtful? What seems to emerge is that what counts is the context of the speech: who says it, to whom, in what forum or with what motive.

Not every truth must be expressed. In our private lives, we often keep secrets or tell "white lies" to our friends or family to shield them from a painful truth. Thus there may be some value in giving second thought to the public expression of speech which is offensive, even if true, especially if the speech serves no compelling purpose. This is particularly true for media commentators, politicians or public servants, whose position is a public trust and who have to meet a high standard of public accountability.

But insensitivity or poor taste can be distinguished from the more pernicious manifestations of racism, intolerance, bigotry and anti-Semitism. Neither of the two radio commentators in Toronto has a public track record of anti-Semitism in any form. I wish there were ways to admonish politicians and media personalities about their insensitive statements, without using the powerful labels of "racist" or "anti-Semite."

Catch 22 for refugees

I have just come back from an international conference on mass immigrations and ethics, held in Washington. Many papers were presented and I made my own modest contribution. I came away from several interesting days of discussion, with the distinct impression that we in Canada are doing better than most refugee-accepting countries.

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut

But there are issues which remain unsolved, chief among them the problem of some 10,000 Somalis who have been accepted by the Immigration and Refugee Board (IRB) as genuine refugees, but whom Canadian law conspires to keep in limbo. These are people who have proven to the Board that they are indeed entitled to acceptance as genuine refugees, even though they could not produce any identity papers.

That is not really surprising. Many people in actual flight from their home country cannot go and ask for a passport — the very question would likely land them in jail or worse. Moreover, in Somalia there has not been a proper central government for quite some time. Hence Somalis frequently have difficulty proving their identity anywhere. This applies especially to women, who have even less of a chance to obtain documents.

Back in 1993, the Canadian Parliament made it more difficult to obtain landed status in our country, and passports or other similar convincing documentation were required. Then the Somalis' bloody war erupted. Many arrived here without proper verification of any kind, perhaps even with fakes which they had been persuaded to buy in a foreign market. It did not take the IRB long to check out their stories and accept them as refugees.

But Canadian law now comes and says, "You can stay but you can't be landed," and that entails a multitude of disadvantages and keeps these people totally insecure. They have no way of obtaining documents and, therefore, are condemned to have no chance of becoming part of our community. It also ensures the continued separation of families. Spouses and dependent children who are overseas can be sponsored by refugees in Canada only after they are landed — and that status is closed to them.

There are other negative consequences: employment possibilities are restricted, for many employers do not wish to take on people who, while accepted as refugees, have no proper papers.

As for the question of admitting possible criminal elements, the sad joke is that criminals most often come under their own name and with proper documents, and rarely have they been discovered amongst the undocumented.

Some of my readers may wonder what this kind of column has to do in a Jewish paper, which is essentially concerned with matters that impact directly on our community. I remind them of the famous statement which the prophet Amos made, speaking on God's behalf. When he addressed the people of Israel, he said in ringing tones: "Are you not like the Ethiopians unto me, O children of Israel?" (Amos, Chapter 9).

By strange happenstance, the Somalis would be the very people about whom Amos would speak today, for they live in the old Ethiopia. What Amos makes clear is that universal human concerns are, in fact, Jewish problems and always will be.

Engel astounded by Benny Cooperman's success

With the publication of Getting Away With Murder, Howard Engel has produced yet another Benny Cooperman mystery novel, the ninth in a series widely regarded in publishing circles as a Canadian institution.

Engel, though, is astounded by its success and astonished that his mythical protagonist has become "part of the Canadian landscape."

Engel — who may be Canada's answer to Raymond Chandler or Ross Macdonald — is surprised by Cooperman's longevity because he's the antithesis of the traditional American or European sleuth. "He's a kind of anti-private eye," explained Engel. "He's the opposite of someone like Sam Spade. He's soft-boiled, not hard-boiled. He has a mother and family connections. He's not a hard drinker. He's sick at the sight of blood. In some ways, he appears not to be a mentsh, though he really is."

And of course, Cooperman is Jewish, virtually the only Jewish gumshoe in the genre. Not surprisingly, Cooperman's Jewishness has a bearing on his personality. "This turns him into an observer of society rather than a full player," said Engel. "It gives him a kind of perspective you don't have if you're in the stir-fry of events. It allows him to look at things in more ways than one."

In his latest novel, published by Penguin this past summer, Engel draws on these characteristics to let Cooperman solve one of his toughest cases in 15 years. Abram Wise, a none too subtle Jewish racketeer, orders his gang of thugs to drag Cooperman out of bed. Wise, fearing his life is in danger, hires Cooperman to investigate. Cooperman is reluctant to accept the assignment, but Wise warns him he has no choice.

Getting Away With Murder is set in Grantham, Ont., a sleepy burg reminiscent of St. Catharines, where Engel was raised and where all his novels unfold. In addition, the book is replete with the qualities readers have come to expect of the Cooperman saga.

The writing is brisk, brimming with self-deprecating wit. In one succinct brushstroke, Engel thus describes a gangster: "He had all the high seriousness of a heavy without a suggestion that he split all of his infinitives."

Moreover, the dialogue is authentic, the characters seem real, and the plot is tantalizing, full of twists and red herrings.

In the current novel, Cooperman has matured into a sophisticated detective. No longer is he the somewhat bumbling figure he was in Engel's first novel, The Suicide Murders. As Engel put it: "His judgment is sounder, he has perfected his methods and has even built up credit with the local cops."

Cooperman has, in the meantime, moved out of his parents' house into his own apartment, quit smoking, discovered that lunch can consist of more than just an egg sandwich and, belatedly, found a girlfriend, Anna Abraham. Perhaps most importantly, Cooperman is actually in demand, having acquired a reputation for doggedness, thoroughness and results.

In Engel's view, Cooperman is closer to the modern archetype of the private eye than he would have been in the past. "He's not a Sam Spade," he observed. "He's more vulnerable and rounded. He lives in a small town, not a big city. He's a Canadian rather than an American, which may bother editors and publishers, but not readers. And he's a member of a minority group."

By all accounts, Cooperman has insinuated himself into the hearts and minds of his readership. "The series has done excellently, and the fact that Penguin is continuing with it is a good sign," Engel noted. "Publishing is a hard-ball business these days. Benny is good for me and Penguin."

Hollywood studios have beckoned

Engel allows that the Cooperman line has been lucrative for him, but he professes a child-like ignorance of its sales. "I'm not a facts and figures guy," he said the other afternoon at a popular outdoor cafe in midtown Toronto. "Ask my agent, Beverley Slopen."

Slopen, too, remains mum when the topic is broached. But she proffers the claim that Engel is "the best-selling and best-known" mystery writer in Canada.

Certainly, Engel's talents have not gone unnoticed by his peers. He was the recipient of the 1984 Arthur Ellis Award for crime fiction and he received the 1990 Harbourfront Festival Prize for Canadian literature.

He has been translated into German, French, Italian, Japanese, Polish, Finnish and Romanian, and Engel has an avid following in the United States. Proudly, he notes that Cooperman has been a clue in the Los Angeles Times' syndicated crossword puzzle.

Furthermore, two of his novels, The Suicide Murders and Murder Sees the Light, were adapted into CBC TV movies, starring Saul Rubinek as Cooperman.

Hollywood has beckoned, with studios having bought options for bringing Cooperman to the big screen.

It takes Engel, 64, about a year to finish a novel, though he churned out the first one in merely two months. "It gets harder with each book," he confessed. Sometimes, he writes himself into corners and must start anew.

Howard Engel

But as a rule, writing comes easily to Engel, a Toronto-born, McMaster University graduate who taught high school for a year and then worked as a freelance foreign correspondent in Europe and Cyprus before signing up with CBC radio as an arts documentary producer.

Rising fairly early, he composes on a computer in an office at his home in the bohemian Annex neighborhood, which he shares with his wife, Janet Hamilton, a novelist, and their six-year-old son. (Engel has two grown twins from a previous marriage.)

A secular Jew whose hobbies include canoeing, swimming and drawing, Engel is content being financially independent, and has no desire whatsoever to be on anyone's payroll again. "I wouldn't want to go back to a regular full-time job."

In 1985, five years after he launched Cooperman, the CBC laid him off in one of its wrenching, cost-cutting sweeps. He is still bitter. "In a way, I feel I was made to walk the plank. I didn't write one word [of the Cooperman series] on CBC time. Now I wish I had."

Despite his preoccupation with and commitment to Cooperman, Engel has other coals in the fire. Currently, he is putting the finishing touches to a book about capital punishment, as seen from a hangman's vantage point. Entitled Behold the Lord High Executioner, it will appear next spring.

And soon, when he's ensconced as the Barker Fairley Distinguished Visitor at the University of Toronto, he intends to begin a novel "written in the voice of a villain. It's going to be my Richard III book."

Cooperman, however, is neither out of sight nor out of mind. "I want to give him a rest. Once in a while, I like to give myself a sabbatical."

But Cooperman, he said, will be back.

Jewish Agency emissary recalls Moscow posting

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Except for the presence of tanks in the streets of Moscow, an attempted coup by Communist hardliners in August 1991 was practically a non-event. It was one of those moments when you realize the difference between news and reality, recalled Baruch Gur recently.

"Only CNN managed to make a big story of democracy against the tanks," he said at a membership reception for Canadian Friends of Tel Aviv University (CFTAU) held at the Inn on the Park Hotel.

Gur, now the Jewish Agency's emissary in Toronto, was recruited by the organization in 1989 to establish a presence in the former Soviet Union and develop the plan for Operation Exodus, an aliyah program which brought tens of thousands of Soviet Jews to Israel.

An historian by training, Gur told CFTAU members that during the coup "if you did not realize what was going on, you would think it was business as usual. You could see guys continuing to clean the streets. The babushkas went to the shops. The policemen let the tanks go and continued to direct traffic."

Because Gur had established a network of summer camps for Soviet Jewish children, he had contacts all over the country at a time when there were few foreigners there.

"Suddenly I began to get all kinds of inquiries [about the attempted coup]," he said. The American ambassador in Israel would go to the office of Simcha Dinitz, then chair of the Jewish Agency, and request political updates that he would relay to Washington, Gur said.

Baruch Gur

To get information, Gur would call a contact at one of the camps, and ask him to go downtown to find out what was going on.

When Gur was originally recruited from academia to work for the Jewish Agency, he figured that establishing a presence for the Zionist organization in the Soviet Union was "mission impossible," but didn't want to turn down a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity.

One way in which he acquired legitimacy in the Soviet system was to go into partnership with Moscow's Academy of Foreign Trade, with the help of a British business contact, running seminars for local professionals, such as Medicine in the Western World: An Israeli Model.

"For them it was a very new thing. I sent very good experts, all of whom knew Russian."

Although the seminars attracted some non-Jews, the vast majority were Jews who planned to leave and wanted to get information about Israel, Gur said.

He was unperturbed by the presence of a KGB agent in the form of an Academy of Foreign Trade "liaison person.

"It was clear to me whom she represented," he said. "I said, 'Everything we do is legitimate. It's better [to have her here]. She provides protection for us.' "

Today 660,000 Soviet Jews live in Israel, and 300,000 have emigrated to other countries since 1989, he said.

The exodus is not over yet, Gur concluded.

JVS logo contest

TORONTO — The 50th anniversary Logo Contest is the first in a series of Jewish Vocational Service of Greater Metropolitan Toronto (JVS)-sponsored activities leading up to the celebration year in 1997.

The winning logo award presentation will be made next May and the logo will be used on all printed material connected with the anniversary celebrations.

All submissions must be original artwork and property of the entrant. They must include the full name of the agency, "50th anniversary" and the words "Serving all of multicultural Toronto." JVS staff, clients, members of the board, volunteers and their families are not eligible.

Submit as many entries as you like. Each entry must be identified with name, address and phone number. Unmarked submissions will be destroyed. Keep a photocopy of each entry. JVS is not responsible for lost submissions. Submissions will only be returned if accompanied by a large self-addressed, stamped envelope.

All entries must be submitted before Feb. 1, 1966. The winning logo will become the sole property of JVS.

Submit all entries to: JVS Logo Competition, 74 Tycos Dr., Toronto, Ont., M6B 1V9.

Kashruth Council sets fall cooking classes

TORONTO — The Kashruth Council of Toronto, affiliated with Vaad Harabonim of Toronto, Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto and Canadian Jewish Congress, has announced its fall lineup of cooking classes.

The classes and demonstrations will be given by Vivian Anhang, a teacher and graduate home economist .

The classes will again be held at the Shaarei Tefilah Congregation on Tuesday evenings at 8 p.m. There is ample parking and public transportation. The fee for each class is $15, or $10 for students under 18.

More Dreamy Desserts (V34) is a new session to be presented on Oct. 31.

All-Weather Salads and Appetizers (V35), to be given on Nov. 7, will feature a variety of hot and cold salads and appetizers.

Pasta Pasta Meat (V19) on Nov. 14 will be a repeat class by popular demand.

Casseroles Galore Part III — Meat (V36) on Nov. 21 will be a new cooking demonstration of a favorite dish.

Vivian Anhang

The classes are limited in enrolment. Registration is on a first-come first-serve basis.

To register, send your name, address, postal code, phone number (home and work) and a postdated cheque (or cheques) for the day of the class to: Information and Public Relations, Kashruth Council of Toronto, 4600 Bathurst St., Suite 240, Willowdale, Ont., M2R 3V2.

If registered for more than one class, please send a separate cheque for each class and for each participant. For more details, call 416-635-9550.

Robotic courier 'Schleps' around Baycrest's halls

TORONTO — Many of the elderly residents at Toronto's Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care can recall a time when there were no cars, televisions or airplanes. And there was certainly nothing like the trackless, beeping robotic courier which recently started roaming the halls at Baycrest Hospital.

Staff at the centre have nicknamed the self-guided robot Schlep. He resembles a futuristic refrigerator, complete with flashing yellow lights, safety bumpers and a vocabulary of 16 computerized voice messages which can be programmed to sound either male or female. (Schlep is a male-sounding, English-speaking robot, although Baycrest is considering programming in a few Yiddish phrases to make him bilingual.)

Schlep, manufactured by the Transitions Research Corp. of Danbury, Conn., is the first robotic courier to be used in a Canadian hospital. Dozens of similar couriers are already employed in American hospitals, where they assume a wide variety of tasks including meal delivery and delivering operating room supplies.

"We're using him to carry out fairly routine tasks," says Vic Lambert, Baycrest's vice-president of information and support services. "For example, he can be programmed to pick up and deliver medical supplies, charts, requisitions and lab specimens. No full-time or regular part-time positions will be affected by his presence."

Wherever he goes at Baycrest, Schlep attracts crowds of curious admirers. Gliding along smoothly at about two feet per second, the robot is programmed with a memory map detailing all corridors and departments so that he can find his way around. Wheel encoders measure the distance travelled and turns made.

Each day he is programmed to follow various routes throughout the hospital, guided by a complex system of sensors which allow him to "see" everything within a 180-degree field. He easily navigates corners and doorways and can actually "call" for an elevator by activating a sophisticated radio signal that communicates with the elevator.

When Schlep's path is blocked, he will stop and politely request the obstacle to move. After 15 seconds, if the obstacle is still in the way, he will attempt to navigate around it. If he doesn't have enough room to pass the obstacle, he will announce politely, "My way is blocked. Please move the obstacle," and remain there patiently until the way is cleared. In case of trouble, the robot is also equipped with emergency stop switches.

Schlep's deliveries are carried in a secure "backpack" which can only be opened by a special key or combination to prevent theft. He is powered by his own set of heavy-duty, rechargeable batteries.

Although the robotic courier could theoretically function 24 hours a day, seven days a week, he is currently working a five-day, 12-hour shift.

When Schlep has finished his programmed rounds, he automatically returns to his home base in the Central Supply Department, where he may be given new instructions or a fresh battery which is required every 12 hours.

Over the past seven weeks, Schlep has undertaken 1,900 "missions" and achieved a 98.6 per cent success rate, although he once got stuck in an elevator.

Celia Smith, a member of Baycrest's Day Care Services for Seniors, meets Schlep the robotic courier.

Markham Chabad Lubavitch has come a long way

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

MARKHAM, Ont. — "We've come a long way, baby!" declared an enthusiastic Rabbi Avraham Plotkin, spiritual leader of Chabad Lubavitch of Markham.

He was speaking at a dinner at Le Parc Banquet Hall celebrating the 10th anniversary of the congregation, which began in the living room of the Plotkins' home, moved to their basement and is now located in an industrial area near Bayview Avenue and John Street.

The dinner also kicked off a fundraising campaign for a community centre and synagogue which is currently awaiting approval from the Ontario Municipal Board.

Plaques of appreciation were presented to some 20 families who, as master of ceremonies Stephen Maizels said, "went the extra mile, just as Lubavitch has gone around the world. Wherever there's a community that wants to be traditional, that's where Lubavitch is."

He praised Rabbi Plotkin and his wife Goldie, and education director Rabbi Meir Gitlin and his wife Esther, for "the enormous amount of work they have done," especially with the youth of the community.

Rabbi Plotkin called the evening "an emotional moment for myself and everyone here, the culmination of a vision that began 10 years ago."

The congregation, he said, "started at the grassroots and grew [into] a family."

Keynote speaker Rabbi Mordechai Berger of Young Israel Congregation of Ottawa and founder of Ecole Maimonide, the only trilingual English-Hebrew-French day school in Ontario, praised the congegation for "its chemistry, potential and dynamism."

He described the work of Rabbi Israel Brody, chief rabbi of the British Commonwealth, who reclaimed "hundreds, maybe thousands" of Jewish children who had been given to Christians during the Holocaust.

Rabbi Brody reached the children, many of whom had had no contact with Judaism for years, by using Yiddish words and songs and simple prayers. "He kindled the core of their hearts — and got those children back," Rabbi Berger said.

Our role, he said, "is to bring our children back to the Jewish people."

In an exuberant tribute to Rabbi Plotkin, a giant cake decorated with sparklers was marched in, and the rabbi was carried on shoulders and on a chair during the dancing that followed.

Greetings were brought by Dave Wiener, president of the congregation, and Markham regional councillor Bill Fisch, speaking for Mayor Don Cousens.

Documenting the Holocaust

By GAYLE NAIMAN

I am the granddaughter of four Polish Jewish Holocaust survivors.

It is an Ashkenazi custom to be named after the deceased. Like other children and grandchildren born and raised after the Holocaust, I was named after my maternal grandmother's younger sister. I know very little of her life in the "old country." All I know is that during the war she was murdered by the Nazis. I never asked my grandmother about my great-aunt or any other relatives killed in the war, mainly because at a young age I was not interested or I was afraid of rekindling my grandmother's painful memories.

Only in my 20s have I come to understand the legacy of the Holocaust that I have inherited from my grandparents. Interest in my Jewish ancestry intensified after a 1993 pilgrimage with 16 members of my family to Poland and Israel. As a result of this journey, my family began to hear an abundance of stories relating to my grandparents' lives before and during the war. Suddenly, I became interested in formally documenting these vivid and intriguing stories about my relatives. Especially now, as my grandparents are in their mid-80s, it is even more urgent that they tell their stories.

To help my grandparents and other survivors document their stories, I decided to volunteer as a camera assistant for Survivors of the Shoah, a non-profit organization founded by movie director Steven Spielberg. The organization, known as the Visual History Foundation, is designed to videotape the testimonies of Holocaust survivors around the world.

The tapes are then preserved for research and educational purposes, in order that future generations will be able to study and remember this period of history. This project is also a meaningful way for families of Holocaust survivors to put the shattered pieces of their lives together by understanding what life was like for their relatives before, during and after the war.

As camera assistant, I aided the interviewer, cameraman and most of all, the survivors, who were anxious and nervous about telling their stories — often for the first time. Survivors often questioned if they were making the right choice by coming forward. However, they often saw their own grandchildren in me and understood the importance and necessity of giving their testimonies.

Numerous times I fought back tears when the survivors showed old photographs of their families and introduced their children and grandchildren. To see the continuity of Jewish life even after the tragedy of the Holocaust is remarkable. I left their homes, not as a stranger, but as a member of their own family — receiving hugs and kisses and a lesson in history that I never could have received from a text book. When survivors are asked why they chose to make this video, almost all reply that the world needs to know what happened during this dark part of history, so that it should never happen again. They want the generation raised in freedom never to go through the terrible, traumatic and unthinkable events they went through 50 years ago.

To my grandparents and other grandparents, whether you were taken to forced labor camps or concentration camps, were hidden as children or escaped to unoccupied territories, each story is unique and just as important in documenting Jewish suffering at the hands of the Nazis. I encourage you to tell your stories — for your children and grandchildren, and for those who will never be able to tell their stories.

And to children of survivors, grandchildren or members of the community, I strongly encourage you to volunteer your time and effort to this project before this limited window of opportunity for documenting testimonies is lost forever. I especially encourage third generation survivors to become involved in this project.

My generation wil be the last to know first-hand those who risked their lives to fight against the horrors of the Holocaust. It is our responsibility to pass this message on to our children and grandchildren. The period of silence is over and we need to know, in order to ensure that it will never happen again.

The social history of American 'Jewishness'

The Wonders Of America: Reinventing Jewish Culture, 1880-1950 by Jenna Weissman Joselit, HarperCollins Canada $29.95.

This book is an original — sometime humorous, always enlightening — account of how American Jews over a period of three generations fashioned their own popular culture. It is the story of how immigrants, first generation Americans and their children in the suburbs chose Jewishness over Judaism.

One of the wonders of America, asserts the author, is how Judaism became less a matter of faith or a regimen of distinctive ritual, than a composite of emotion, consumerism, pragmatism and pageantry. The rabbis deplored lavish bar mitzvah receptions, the overemphasized Chanukah, the failure to observe Sukkot and Shavuot, as well as tasteless religious artifacts and tshatshkes, but their unlistening flocks went their own way.

The author, a Princeton professor and authority on American Jewish life and culture, describes the widespread Jewish kitsch of the time: chocolate matzah, gothic-lettered brit invitations and a menorah made of mah-jong tiles. The pages of the Yiddish press in the 1920s featured Aunt Jemima's pancake mix as the best flour for latkes and a Hudson car as a true Chanukah bargain for the entire family, "the greatest metziah in the world." An ad for vegetable shortening declared that "the Hebrew race has been waiting 4,000 years for Crisco." Mother Goose rhymes were written to celebrate holidays: "Jack Spoons could eat no prunes,/his wife could eat no quinces/but when Shavuos came around,/they both enjoyed their blintzes."

Surprisingly, The Wonders of America contains the recollections of the late Stuart Rosenberg, one-time rabbi of Toronto's Beth Tzedec Congregation. He recalls that in Brooklyn, N.Y., during the 1930s, when he became a bar mitzvah, the main event "was not the synagogue service but what followed later that evening. His party was held at the fashionable Casa de Rey, a Coney Island establishment, replete with a band, lots of guests, much food and many gifts. That was part of the new style of American Judaism."

Sisterhood gift shops numbering in the hundreds by the mid 1950s carried an astonishing array of Jewish ritual and gift items. These included dreidels, challah covers, ornate yarmulkes, "yahrzeit bulb and stand," as well as "lovely items from Israel."

In a chapter entitled Kitchen Judaism, the author explores Jewish gastronomy and how food preferences changed. A writer from the Yiddish daily Der Tog described the war between chop suey and gefilte fish. For him the abandonment of the fish for the alien Chinese dish was a blatant form of assimilation. He wondered about the possibility of placards reading, "Down with Chop Suey! Long live Gefilte Fish."

For most non-pious Jews, the amalgam of familiar rites and observation with a new American emphasis was not considered undesirable but rather a pleasant form of acculturation that even revitalised Judaism.

Strikingly illustrated, well researched and absorbingly written, this social history of how American Jewry reinvented itself is not only a depiction of the past, but also a mirror held up to our own time in which we can see ourselves and perhaps something of the future.

Sukkot focuses attention at life's important values

Rabbinic Reflections

By RABBI LOUIS SCHECHTER

For one week in the year, we leave our sturdy, centrally-heated (or air-conditioned) homes with all their conveniences, and live in frail sukkahs designed to admit the wind and weather. The roof, in fact, must be loose enough so that the stars may be seen from within.

We are often so impressed with ourselves and our achievements that we feel indestructible. We trust implicitly in our power and possessions to protect us. In health and prosperity we cannot consider seriously the possibility of misfortune. We leave the security of our homes on Sukkot to remember that we are here only temporarily, that nothing we own can protect us from any strong wind. Man's evaluation of himself is brought down to size. This is not intended to induce melancholy, or to discourage withdrawal from this world or morbid contemplation of imminent doom. It is to help man reconsider his ambitions, to separate the transitory and illusory from the substantial (if not necessarily material) attainments, the whim from the worthwhile.

Etrog, lulav, hadas, aravah

For example, in the singleminded struggle for financial security, all other values are sometimes ruthlessly sacrificed. Health, family, even enjoyment of living, commonly join religious values in being rejected or neglected. But should not each man have some time for re-examining his needs, to avoid the possibility of wasting precious and irretrievable years in pursuit of dispensables?

The mightiest fortresses we can create are ultimately no stronger than the little sukkah. But from the sukkah we can still see the Heaven above us, we can see the stars and regain our bearings, to give an ideal and a direction to our lives.

Besides having all our meals in the sukkah, there is another major observance of the holiday. Each morning, except Shabbat, we take four varieties of plants and recite a blessing over them. They are the etrog (citron), lulav (palm branch), hadas (myrtle), and aravah (willow).

The etrog is endowed with flavor and aroma; the lulav and hadas have either flavor or aroma; the aravah has neither. The rabbis tell us that the four varieties parallel the different types of Jews with their qualities and shortcomings, flavor and aroma being symbolic of learning and good deeds.

There are Jews comparable to the etrog — they are scholars who put their learning into practice. They recognize learning as the key to a full Jewish life and devote themselves to the study of Torah. At the same time, Torah is not mere theory for them — they act according to the teachings of the Torah they study.

Other Jews have learning. They may be scholars of considerable note and have an intellectual understanding of Torah, but it remains in the mind. Despite their learning, these men may fail to observe the many precepts in the Torah governing man's relations with men and his relation with G-d.

Still others, perhaps more common than the last group, are men of little schooling who are nonetheless active Jews. The Bible and Talmud are mysteries to them; they are completely ignorant of the intricacies of Jewish law; the very prayers may be unintelligible to them. However, they live as Jews should, observe mitzvot conscientiously and deal honestly and forthrightly with their fellows.

The saddest is the aravah-Jew. Poor fellow, he has neither learning nor deeds to boast of. He seems to be the superfluous Jew, getting nothing from Judaism, giving nothing to Judaism.

It is interesting that before the blessings over the four plants can be recited, the plants must be united, actually held together, touching. If one is missing, even the humble aravah, then the others are utterly useless. Every Jew, regardless of his measurable virtues, is indispensable to Jewry. The best are no more the totality of Israel than are the lowliest. The strength of Israel lies in its unity, in the ability and readiness of etrog and aravah to work together.

Family purity laws — a 'total human experience' of great spirituality

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

Arna Poupko

TORONTO — Observance of the laws of family purity — taharat hamishpachah — gives "a taste of the total Jewish experience by a simple act," says lecturer and scholar Arna Poupko.

Speaking at the opening function of Beth Avraham Yoseph Congregation's sisterhood, Poupko, a doctoral candidate at McGill University and scholar in residence at Montreal's FEDERATION/CJA, said observing family purity laws are a sign of "Jewish dignity, pride, faith, uniqueness and specificity."

Taharat hamishpachah, she explained, is in the category of a chok — a mitzvah for which no reason is given.

"It is an act of adherence to Hakodesh Baruch Hu."

She attributed the mikvah's popularity to the fact that it too is a chok, something shrouded in mystery.

"The things that are most spiritually uplifting, like poetry, music, art," have an element of mystery — something about them that can't be explained only by the intellect."

Taharat hamishpachah combines the total human experience — "mind, body, the senses, relationships, body rhythm, G-d, and children, with poetry and sensitivity."

The world "is desperately searching for that kind of experience."

The mitzvah has even been accepted by "radical Jewish feminists," Poupko said, who have "taken it as a feminist charge."

The law is not only a way to greater spirituality and a way to express oneself as a woman, she said, but also a search for connection.

"It speaks of the romance of the relationship and the closeness between husband and wife. It shows that even a chok is filled with glory and wonderful benefits."

In other beliefs, those seeking spiritual enlightenment "disassociate themselves from the natural world," she said.

"But Judaism says that the natural world is beautiful and holy — that we should enjoy it."

Musical entertainment was by Ariella Goldberg. A play, A Night at the Mikvah, written by Sherri Wise, was performed, to laughter and applause, by Chaya Smuckler & Co., a group of Orthodox actresses who write and perform plays on religious themes.

CJC invites comments on elections

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — If you have something to say about the elections at the Canadian Jewish Congress Plenary Assembly last May, you have until Nov. 30 to make a written submission to a Congress committee reviewing the organization's bylaws.

The members of the ad hoc committee, headed by Herbert Marx, a Quebec Superior Court judge, were chosen at a closed-door meeting of Congress officers.

They are: Renee Switzer Bellas of Vancouver, chair of the Congress national executive; Keith Landy of Toronto, Congress honorary legal counsel; Victor Goldberg of Halifax, first vice-president of the Atlantic Jewish Council; Rabbi Reuven Bulka of Ottawa, vice-chair of Congress' international affairs committee; Les Scheininger of Toronto, a past Congress national president; and Marilyn Blumer of Montreal, a FEDERATION CJA vice-president.

Named "participating observers" are two Montrealers, Myer Bick, chair of the executive of the Canadian Friends of Tel Aviv University; and Sharon Wolfe, who was the plenary's programming chair.

Officially, the committee is mandated to "review the electoral issues based upon previous Congress plenary experiences in order to make recommendations for changes to Bylaw 66 and consequential regulations and to report by March 31, 1996."

Bylaw 66 is the constitution that governs the basic operations of Congress.

Submissions to the committee may be made by individuals or organizations. Oral presentations of these submissions will be heard at a time and place yet to be announced, although Congress communications director Mike Cohen said they will likely be held in January and February, probably in Montreal and Toronto.

Submissions may be sent to: The Secretary, Ad Hoc Bylaw Review Committee, 1590 Docteur Penfield, Montreal, Que. H3G 1C5, or by fax at 514-931-0548.

Blumer, who is also an officer of CJF Canada, the body that decides the annual allocation to Congress, said that "in the end, I'd like to see a streamlined electoral process ... I hope we'll emerge stronger in every way as a community."

Thomas Hecht, who lost his bid for the Congress presidency to Goldie Hershon, said he welcomed the establishment of the committee "as long as it is understood that this is an all-encompassing study, including the process wherein officers of the plenary became active participants as candidates or members of the candidates' campaign."

Hecht is referring to Hershon's having continued to serve as chair of the plenary after announcing she would seek the presidency (she later stepped down at the behest of the officers). In addition, plenary programming chair Wolfe was on Hershon's campaign team.

Hecht said he would definitely make a submission to the committee.

"I want a completely open process ... the many questions raised by this plenary must be answered unequivocally and forthrightly by this committee," he said.

CITY OF TORONTO

Probationary Fire Fighters

The City of Toronto encourages individuals to join our Fire Department as Probationary Fire Fighters. In addition to fire fighting services, you will perform rescue work, administer first aid, respond to emergency hazardous material situations, and maintain fire fighting apparatus, equipment and fire stations. You must be capable of handling intense and sustained physical effort and be able to communicate clearly in English under stressful conditions. Alternatively, successful candidates may be assigned to one of the department's support divisions.

To qualify, you must be legally allowed to work in Canada, possess the prescribed hearing and visual requirements (20/30 in each eye without corrective lenses, and colour vision which is safe for fire fighting). At the time of application, you must possess a valid Ontario class `G' license (minimum) with the ability to obtain a class `D' with a `Z' brake endorsement by the time of the job offer expected in early 1996. You must also have a good driving record with no more than 5 demerit points and no unpaid fines. You also possess a secondary school diploma or have the equivalent combination of education and experience.

In addition to having a current Standard First Aid Certificate and C.P.R. (Cardio-Pulmonary Resuscitation) Basic Rescuer Certificate, applicants will be required to obtain an Occupation Specific Vision, Hearing and Fitness Assessment Certificate from York University. Applicants who successfully meet the required standard at each stage will be invited to write an aptitude test, attend an interview and complete a job-related medical examination.

The City's process for Fire Fighter recruitment has recently been revised. The City will be adopting a continuous recruitment process. The first phase will allow candidates who currently possess the necessary qualifications to submit their applications and be considered for the anticipated 1996 recruit class. These applications must be submitted no later than Friday, December 1, 1995. Early in 1996, candidates who do not possess the necessary qualifications will be able to submit their applications at any time and to work towards meeting the necessary qualifications at their own pace within a specified time frame. Qualified candidates will then proceed through the recruitment process and be considered for future hirings based on available vacancies.

The current annual 1995 pay range for this position is $37,420 to $53,457.

Recruitment packages will be available from September 30 to November 30, 1995,at the main security desk of Toronto City Hall, 100 Queen Street West, between the hours of 7:00 a.m. and 7:00 p.m. Interested applicants are invited to attend a Fire Fighter Career Information Session at the Toronto Fire Academy, 895 Eastern Avenue, Toronto, on Tuesday, October 10, 1995 at 7:00 p.m. or on Saturday, October 14, 1995 at 10:00 a.m.

Completed applications for the 1996 recruit class should be forwarded to: Keith M. Fielding, Director, Personnel Services Division, Management Services Department, 2nd Floor, West Tower, City Hall, Toronto, Ontario, M5H 2N2. Applications must be received not later than December 1, 1995.

The City of Toronto is an equal opportunity employer and encourages applications from qualified Aboriginal people, people with disabilities, racial minorities and women. TTY users please call 392-7996.

Personal information is collected under the authority of the Municipal Act R.S.O. 1990, c. M. 45, s. 207, para. 45, and By-laws 18037 and 20689, and will be used to determine eligibility for employment. Questions regarding this collection should be directed to the Director, Personnel Services at the above address.

Claridge Israel supports Tel Aviv youth centre

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Claridge Israel Inc., the Israeli arm of Charles Bronfman's investment firm, Claridge Inc., has donated $600,000 (US) to the Tel Aviv Foundation's Municipal Youth Centre.

Etty Lothan, the foundation's project coordinator, said during a recent visit to Canada that the centre provides special services to over 500 adolescents with behavioral problems.

Lothan said her visit here was part of a renewed effort by the foundation, which is run by the city of Tel Aviv, to raise its profile in Canada.

Such an effort was first launched in Toronto in 1988, but did not pan out. In May, Lothan was in Toronto again to seek out support, but she indicated the most likely first Canadian city for an actual office will be Montreal.

To that end, Lothan said Tel Aviv Mayor Roni Milo, who also chairs the foundation, is slated to visit Montreal next spring to officially launch the Canadian office.

HALIFAX — On August 1, 1993, hundreds of former campers and staff assembled at Camp Kadimah for the camp's 50th anniversary.

A small group of present and former Yarmouth, N.S. residents renewed acquaintances, reminisced about the good old days in their southwestern Nova Scotia town and made a decision.

"Let's hold a Yarmouth reunion," they said. "The Jewish population in our town is dwindling. Let's bring everyone together again to recall what life was like when there were 50 families here."

Now, two years later, Ruth Pink, who still calls Yarmouth home, reflects on a "weekend of memories. If you asked each of us what memories we have, you'd get a different answer. Each of us could write our own book."

It took time for Rosalie Indig, who grew up in Yarmouth, and two other former Yarmouth residents, Roz Agulnik of Montreal and Ruth Noel of St. John's, Nfld., to contact community elders and then to track down former Yarmouth families. They sent letters across North America to generate the gathering of 85 Jewish family members from Yarmouth who reminisced through a late summer 1995 weekend.

Sixty years ago, nearly 50 Jewish families lived in the town, ran a busy synagogue program, developed a strong Jewish community and contributed to the overall life of the town. Today, there are eight Jewish families — 26 people — but Pink spoke of the power in good deeds of the small numbers.

"The community donated a Torah to Israel last November," she said. "We may be small in numbers but we're mighty in memories and good deeds."

Lester Pink prepared a history of the community. "We are proud we have existed as an Orthodox Jewish community for 90 years," he said. He talked of the first shul over a store at the corner of Main and Brown streets and about the purchase of the synagogue in 1910.

The veteran community member said he wanted to remind the young people attending, "We are proud, very proud, to have been members of this Jewish community."

Weekend activities included a visit to the Jewish cemetery, part of the Yarmouth Mountain Cemetery, a tour of the Yarmouth area, two banquets and a visit to the synagogue on William Street.

Cantors kick off celebration

By MIRIAM SOBEL
CJN Ottawa Correspondent

OTTAWA — Five Ottawa cantors brought the house down with their energetic, toe-tapping rendition of a holiday prayer at the kick-off to the city's Jerusalem 3000 celebration last week.

The cantors were the closing act at a noon-hour gathering at Ottawa City Hall. They sang two moving selections about Jerusalem and closed with a version of the prayer Shehechianu that was part march, part barbershop quartet. It brought the audience to its feet.

The Hillel Academy children's choir also entertained schoolmates, visitors and dignitaries with a selection of Hebrew songs.

Stephen Victor, executive director of the Canada Israel Committee said it was a miracle that the Jewish connection with Jerusalem has survived hundreds of years of persecution.

"If that was a miracle, and I believe it is, then let me ask for one more miracle. Let the city of Jerusalem, which David established, be known as the city of peace," he said.

Richard Cannings, a city of Ottawa councillor, praised Jerusalem as a vibrant, cosmopolitan city and marvelled at its age.

"When we talk about the jewel of Ottawa, the Byward Market, being 160 years old, it's hard to get your mind around Jerusalem, a city that is 3,000 years old," he said.

The kick-off ended with the raising of the Jerusalem 3000 flag by students of Hillel Academy.

In the evening, the Jerusalem 3000 committee hosted a reception following a performance by the avant garde Batsheva dancers from Israel.

JNF Pacific to participate in Jerusalem 3000 party

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VICTORIA — In his first speech here, the Jewish National Fund's new Pacific region shaliach reminded the Jewish community of how much Israel relies on the organization.

JNF provides services in afforestation, water conservation, land preparation for immigrants and enhancement of the environment, according to Brig.-Gen. Itzchak Fuchs.

If these services were left to the government, Fuchs said, they would be at the bottom of a priority list because of massive defence spending.

Speaking at the home of Stan and Miriam Fisher to prepare for the High Holy Days campaign, Fuchs said JNF serves 4.5 million Jews in Israel, but does not extend its work to the West Bank.

Ruth Freeman, president of the region, said Victoria and Vancouver Island are fundraising models for small communities, with more than $65,000 pledged in last year's Yom Tov campaign. In general, the Pacific region doubled its budget in funds sent to Israel.

Freeman said that in this year's campaign, "we will be asking you to share in fighting the effects of the July forest fires that destroyed two million trees, by planting new trees."

She said support will be sought also to finance JNF's gift of an amphitheatre in Jerusalem to mark the city's 3,000th anniversary. She said the project will be known as KKL (Keren Kayemeth Leisrael Park), located in the southern part of the city, on the slopes of Gilo.

The amphitheatre and recreation site will accommodate up to 40,000 people. Acoustics, staging and lighting will have the latest hi-tech features; it will have picnic sites, recreation areas and playgrounds.

Freeman said KKL Park "will be a rallying point for the citizens of Israel as well as a showcase to the world."

Freeman announced also a JNF tour, leaving May 20, 1996, to take part in the Jerusalem 3000 celebrations.

Shari Sheffman, chair of the Victoria division, said the Kol Nidrei appeal at Congregation Emanu-El will be made by Miriam Fisher, who, with her husband, spent the past 10 months in Israel.

Sheffman said the traditional Blue Box campaign will be stepped up through the Hebrew schools. As in Vancouver, Yom Ha'atzmaut is the target date for collection of the boxes.

A Tu b'Shevat telethon is planned. Last year it brought in over $4,000.

Sheffman said that with the cooperation of the region, JNF programming will be increased here. And an effort will be made to bring to Victoria speakers from Israel who will be coming to Vancouver.

Phone campaign on tap

VANCOUVER — A phone campaign for the Combined Jewish Appeal (CJA) will run through the month of October, culminating in two Super Sunday telethons, Oct. 22 and 29.

Individuals can sponsor Super Sunday phones at $100 each. Phones will be used during the month and at the Jewish Community Centre on the Super Sundays.

The campaign opened officially at a public meeting at the Gateway Theatre in suburban Richmond, featuring a multi-media production from Israel plus a performance by the local Shalom Dancers.

A feature of this year's campaign, New Voices ... New Choices, is that donors with an increase over last year's gift can designate 50 per cent of the increase to a local organization of their choice.

Co-chairs Arnie and Susan Fine said the community campaign has evolved from dropping coins in a pushke to collecting door to door on behalf of the needy.

They said with the Jewish population growing at a rapid pace, "we need to support the new programs, new synagogues and day and supplementary schools that are springing up around us to meet the needs of our growing, diverse population. The CJA is about thousands of Jews helping thousands of Jews."

Winnipeg shul celebrates repair of Torah scrolls

By MYRON LOVE
CJN Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG — There was singing and dancing recently at Winnipeg's Conservative Beth Israel Synagogue as sofer (scribe) Rabbi Jacob Klein from New York put the finishing touches to the synagogue's newly-repaired Torah scrolls.

The Beth Israel was formed about 25 years ago from a merger of the old Tiferes Israel (or Meziritcher) shul and the Hebrew Sick Benefit Association, a loan society which used to hold yom tov services for its members.

Early this year, Rabbi Klein was flown in to inspect the north Winnipeg synagogue's century-old Torah scrolls and found five of them to be wanting.

With $10,000 in funding provided by the Jewish Foundation of Manitoba, the scrolls were sent to New York for repairs. Rabbi Klein returned with them on Sept. 14.

Shul members began the rededication by taking the scrolls outside and marching back in with them under a chupah.

After the celebration with the Torahs, Rabbi Klein went to work. He had left the last little bit unfinished so that shul members could have a once in a lifetime opportunity to have the letters of their names inscribed in the Torah.

As everyone gathered around, Rabbi Klein had each person touch the ink-tipped feather he was printing with, before he printed the person's name. His work completed, the last Torah scroll was returned to its place in the ark ready for Rosh Hashanah.

Ages 5-9. $1.00

Several years ago, teacher and storyteller, Aubrey Davis, was invited to tell a Chanukah tale to a group of 1500 children at Young People's Theatre in Toronto. With the help of some friends, he found a Jewish version of Stone Soup that after extensive revision became Bone Button Borscht. Now many more children will be able to read this tale about finding humour, hope and kindness in a dark world.

Sunday, November 12
1:30 p.m.
Renowned author Jean Little reads from her new book Jenny and the Hanukkah Queen.

Jenny's mother asks "who needs Santa Claus when they have the Hanukkah Queen?" Even though Jenny can remember lighting the candles and playing the dreidel games last Hanukkah, she can't remember the Hanukkah Queen. But when Jenny and her friends let their imaginations soar, a magical and charming story about family, love and tradition is told.
For ages 8-10. $1.00

3:00 p.m.

Transforming federalism

So what do we have? We have a referendum that is in reality simply a straw poll. The people of Quebec are being asked to give their opinion on a question framed by the sovereigntists, one that is ambivalent, confusing, impractical and non-binding. Nonetheless, that being said, it is still a vote of crucial importance that all Canadians must take seriously, if only because, except for the separatists, no one wants the referendum to become a "neverendum."

And that is what will undoubtedly happen should the expected triumph of the No side not be followed by real reform and meaningful changes. The victory of the federalist side can only be a true victory if the various governments of Canada and its provinces commit themselves to transforming Canadian federalism so that it is acceptable not only to Quebec but to the majority of Canadians. We can afford no more Meech Lake or Charlottetown disasters.

Yet sadly that is the future we face. What ought to concern us is the growing number of Canadians in both camps who see this vote as a definitive parting of the way. There are far too many voices in English Canada talking confidently — even enthusiastically — about the new challenge of deconfederation, of finally ridding themselves of the Quebec albatross which has for so long prevented Canada from becoming a truly great country.

What these zealots fail to understand is the real genius of the Canadian nation. For over two centuries the major challenge of Canada has been to accommodate in one state two nationalisms — one French, distinct and homogeneous, the other English, inchoate and undefined — each with its own culture, language, traditions, memories and heroes. And for 200 years we have more or less succeeded.

Constitutional battles are not new in this country. We have had them at least since the rebellions of 1837. And we have always found a way to muddle through, to forge the necessary compromises to allow us to continue as a nation. But more importantly we have been able to build a Canada worth preserving and fighting for, a Canada whose watchwords are decency and civility, whose goals are equality and fairness and whose motivating principles are tolerance and humanity.

Will referendum solve anything?

As Canadians, especially as Jewish Canadians, we ought to appreciate how far we have moved as a society over the past few decades. We are not, thankfully, the country we were a generation ago — closed, narrow-minded, parochial, elitist. Rather we have evolved into a nation that celebrates differences, that tries — often clumsily, but with determination — to accommodate as many diversities as possible; a nation that has provided a much-needed haven for increasing numbers of desperate refugees and immigrants.

That is why so much is at stake in ensuring that we survive as a nation. That is why it is so critical that we beat back the forces trying to divide us.

Canada is a large nation. Our task is to make it a great one.

Winnipeg schools get funding boost

By MYRON LOVE
CJN Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG — The Winnipeg Board of Jewish Education (WBJE) and other private schools in Manitoba are receiving $100 extra per student in provincial government funding this year — an 11.6 per cent increase — after a two-year freeze on increases. (The public school budget was frozen this year).

That means private schools receive $2,400 per student from the government, 68 per cent of what public schools get.

"We are moving closer to the 80 per cent of public school funding the government has committed to reach for us," says WBJE superintendent Dr. Arnold Carmel. "This will make it easier for us to provide additional services, particularly for special needs students. We have been scrambling for funding for special needs children the last couple of years," Carmel says.

"This will also help buy new technology and balance our budget."

Carmel reports that the BJE schools enrolment for 1995-96 stands at 821. Enrolment is about the same at the north Winnipeg Talmud Torah-I. L. Peretz elementary school; a little higher at Ramah, the south Winnipeg elementary school; and down somewhat at the Joseph Wolinsky Collegiate.

As for the Hebrew bilingual elementary school programs, Centennial School in north Winnipeg's Seven Oaks school division has an enrolment of 123, down 10 from last year.

The Winnipeg school division's Brock-Corydon program has 167 students studying Hebrew.

While student numbers at Brock-Corydon are increasing slightly every year, the numbers at Centennial are decreasing, reflecting the continuing shifts of Winnipeg's Jewish population from the north to the south.

Sheik, followers convicted for bombing plot

CJN News Services

NEW YORK — A U.S. federal jury last Sunday found Egyptian cleric Sheik Omar Abdel-Rahman and nine of his Muslim militant followers guilty of seditious conspiracy, stemming from a plot to blow up the United Nations, kill Egypt's president and bomb a bridge and vital highway tunnels in New York.

The jury also convicted one of the defendants, El Sayyid Nosair, in the 1990 killing of extremist Rabbi Meir Kahane, a crime for which he had once been acquitted.

The jurors had deliberated for a week.

Most of the defendants looked on sternly. But one smirked and another repeatedly yelled in Arabic, "Allahu Akbar!" (God is great!)

Abdel-Rahman kept his head bowed, as he had throughout the trial while he listened to an interpreter through headphones. His attorney, Lynne Stewart, cried.

Afterwards, she told reporters that the blind cleric said that he was not the first person to go to prison for his beliefs, and he won't be the last.

The verdict concluded a nine-month trial featuring more than 200 witnesses and hundreds of exhibits in a heavily guarded Manhattan courthouse patrolled daily by a bomb-sniffing dog.

Facing a rarely used Civil War-era seditious conspiracy charge, the defendants were accused of plotting bombings and killings to make the United States stop supporting Israel and Egypt, two enemies of militant Muslims.

The sheik and Nosair face life in prison; the other eight up to 30 years.

The centrepiece of the plot featured five bombs in 10 minutes, meant to blow up the United Nations, the Lincoln and Holland tunnels, the George Washington Bridge and a federal building housing the FBI, according to the government. Videotapes showed defendants mixing bomb ingredients in a Queens garage just before their 1993 arrests.

The government had cast a wide net with the trial, using an FBI informant code named "Dallas" to shut down a terrorist cell that prosecutors said had operated in the United States since 1989.

It cited proof of telephone contact between the sheik and World Trade Centre bombers and transcripts of hundreds of taped conversations and excerpts from speeches in which the Egyptian sheik said, "We must terrorize the enemies of Islam and ... shake the earth under their feet."

Assistant U.S. attorney Patrick Fitzgerald said that in 1990, the 57-year-old cleric, months after arriving in the United States, urged attacks similar to the 1983 suicide bombing that killed 241 U.S. Marines and caused the withdrawal of a peacekeeping force from the Middle East.

He said Abdel-Rahman called the United States "the No. 1 enemy of Islam."

Members of the Jihad Organization allegedly sought to bring a global holy war to the United States by killing Rabbi Kahane and bombing the trade centre.

They then allegedly sought to assassinate Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, bomb five sites in a single day and kidnap or kill other dignitaries. They even discussed kidnapping ex-president Richard Nixon, who died last year, and former secretary of state Henry Kissinger.

Sheik Omar Abdel-Rahman

"Terrorism is real. It is here. It is in this courtroom," Fitzgerald told the jury.

In 1991, Nosair was acquitted in state court in the Rabbi Kahane killing but was jailed on related weapons charges.

In the 1980s, the sheik had been acquitted twice in his homeland of commanding others to kill Egyptian President Anwar al-Sadat, who was assassinated in 1981. He was convicted in absentia in 1994 for a role in a 1989 anti-government riot and was sentenced to seven years hard labor.

Defence lawyers had argued that the FBI created the United Nations plot to save face after ignoring warnings prior to the trade centre attack that a bombing would take place.

The defense case was aided by dozens of audiotapes an informant made secretly of his talks with his FBI handlers because he feared the agency would turn against him.

Four defendants testified, but not the sheik.

The verdict came in the second of three trials stemming from the trade centre bombing, which killed six people, caused $500 million worth of damage and reduced the feeling of security among Americans.

Four men were convicted last year in the Feb. 26, 1993 bombing and were sentenced to 240 years in prison.

In a trial expected next year, the scope will be widened further, as the government claims that the trade centre bombing was part of a worldwide terrorism campaign that continued into 1995 with plans to bomb airplanes from the sky.

That trial will feature the case against Ramzi Yousef, the alleged mastermind of the trade centre bombing. He was arrested in Pakistan this year after two years on the run.

'New page' turns in Israel/Japan relations

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

Last month's visit to Israel by Japan's prime minister, Tomiichi Murayama — the first by a Japanese leader — heralded a new era in Israel's bilateral relations with Japan.

MIDEAST ANALYSIS

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin was certainly correct in describing Murayama's visit as "a new page" in Israel's often difficult relationship with that Asian powerhouse.

Japan, with the world's second largest economy, maintained proper but decidedly cool ties with Israel until quite recently. Heavily dependent on Arab oil and thus in thrall to the Arab boycott against Israel, Japan exerted no real effort to expand trade with Israel.

Traumatized by the 1973 Arab oil boycott, which had loomed as a dire threat to its robust economy, the Japanese government switched to a pro-Arab policy by discouraging major Japanese businesses from dealing with Israel. And Japan pointedly declined to send a commercial attache to its embassy in Tel Aviv.

Over the years, given the increasing integration of the world's economy, the erosion of the Arab boycott and the pressure brought on Japan by the United States and its Western allies, this policy gradually crumbled.

In 1987, Japan agreed to receive an Israeli trade mission spearheaded by the Israel Manufacturer's Association. A year later, when Japan's first cabinet minister visited Israel, a delegation of Japanese businessmen reciprocated the visit.

These exchanges had what may be a lasting impact. Japanese industrialists who had avoided Israel like the plague had a second look. What they saw was a market that held out promising possibilities.

Auto makers like Toyota, Nissan, Honda and Mitsubishi were among the first to take the plunge. Subaru, which had entered the Israeli marketplace years before and had turned nifty profits there, was an obvious role model.

Home electronics companies which had also boycotted Israel found a niche in Israel too, as did investors like Toyo Ink, the world's second biggest ink maker, and Rekoto Kasai, a company which plans to build a hi-tech industrial park near Beersheva.

Israel's historic rapprochement with the PLO and its subsequent peace treaty with Jordan doubtless changed the climate in Japan to one of acceptance of doing business with Israel.

•In November 1993, the Japanese Business Centre, whose mandate is to promote trade with Israel, opened in Tel Aviv.

•In December 1994, Rabin, with a group of Israeli businessmen in tow, visited Japan, thus becoming the first Israeli prime minister to set foot on Japanese soil.

The visit was not merely ceremonial. Japan's premier announced that Japanese firms would be allowed to invest in the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange. Furthermore, new cooperative agreements in science and culture were signed.

And in a sign of the times, Rabin and his wife, Leah, were invited to the royal palace in Tokyo for an audience with Emperor Akihito and Empress Michiko.

With Murayama's visit to Jerusalem last month, Japan's growing economic links with Israel have been formalized.

The volume of trade has reached $2 billion (US) annually, making Japan Israel's most important partner after the United States. Interestingly enough, Israel is one of the very few nations that runs a trade surplus with Japan.

Diamonds are Israel's chief export. Cars top the list of Japanese goods flowing into Israel.

Japan supports the Middle East peace process, knowing full well that stability and profits are interrelated. Japan has pledged $200 million to the Palestine National Authority in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank town of Jericho, and it has promised to dispatch observers to help monitor future Palestinian elections in the territories.

Japan is also planning to contribute a small contingent of troops to the United Nations peacekeeping force on the Golan Heights. Fifty years after Japan's defeat in World War II, it is a development which foreshadows the end of Japanese political timidity in the international arena.

The Week in Israel

Sept. 25

• The IDF was scheduled to report upon its investigation into the suicide of a young female soldier the week before. Her suicide was the 25th among soldiers since the start of 1995.

• Ha'aretz announced the death of one its longtime columnists, Dr. Shlomo Gross. Dr. Gross had been with the newspaper since 1949. He wrote under the nom de plum "Pols." He was 84 years old.

• Two soldiers, Aviv Mor, 20, of Haifa and Uri David, 19, of Bat Yam were killed in south Lebanon when they came under attack from Hezbollah.

Sept. 26

• Ha'aretz reported that the Bank of Israel would announce an inflation target for 1996 of between seven and 10 per cent.

• Israel's current balance of payments deficit reached $2.5 billion during the first half of 1995. This was slightly more than the deficit for all of 1994 and twice the deficit for 1993.

Sept. 27

• Alexander (Sasha) Argov, one of Israel's best known composers, passed away at the age of 81. Argov, a winner of the Israel Prize, had written over 1,000 songs.

Sept. 28

• To protest their opposition to the Interim Agreement, an alternative signing ceremony attended by Knesset members, IDF reserve officers, rabbis and representatives of West Bank settlements was held in Jerusalem. Participants signed a declaration of loyalty to the Land of Israel.

Sept. 29

• Ma'ariv reported that Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, King Hussein and Yasser Arafat had confirmed that they have been discussing the establishment of a confederation between Jordan and the Palestinians. Peres told reporters:"Both Hussein and Arafat understand that this is the preferred option. They still need to find the magic formula to live together." King Hussein agreed that he was open to the idea of confederation.

• The European Union and Israel initialled an agreement on economic and commercial cooperation. The agreement is aimed at easing entry for Israeli products into the European market and solving the growing Israeli trade deficit with Europe.

key positions: the mountainous spine of Judea and Samaria, the Jordan valley, Greater Jerusalem, control of the roads and the settlements."

Around Jerusalem, when passers-by and shopkeepers were randomly interviewed, it seemed that few Jewish Israelis wholeheartedly supported the Interim Agreement.

Although many say they are uncomfortable about making concessions to the Palestinians, they feel unable to stop the momentum.

"I hope for the best, of course, but I am afraid," Shoshana Cohen, a soft-spoken Jerusalemite in her 50s, said just hours before the White House signing ceremony.

"Look for yourself. There is none of the euphoria that greeted the peace treaty with Egypt. Were you in Israel then? People were thrilled, they danced in the streets."

Cohen, taking pains to stress that she is not anti-Arab, recalled strained Arab-Jewish relations during her childhood. "I grew up in the Old City, so I know the Arabs," she said. "Growing up, my family lived in a one-room apartment with a single window. Every night, my father boarded up that window because Arabs would bang their knives against the grill. They threw stones at us as children. So, yes, I'm concerned about the future."

Said Uzi Avrashim, a 26-year-old exercise instructor: "I'm not unhappy about Oslo 2, but I am uneasy. The agreement isn't clear enough. I get all my information from the TV and newspapers; so it's impossible to know what it all means."

Taking the issue of Hebron as an example, Avrashim asked, "What will happen to Kiryat Arba and the Tomb of the Patriarchs? They must stay in our hands."

Asked whether he believes the agreement will culminate in a Palestinian state, he shrugged and said, "It's clear that there will be a Palestinian state. What can we do about it now? This is just the way it will be.

"What bothers me most," he added, "is the way the government has pushed through the agreement without telling us anything. Why shouldn't we feel uneasy?"

But Ayad Hoshi, an 18-year-old Palestinian lifeguard working in western Jerusalem, called the agreement "a good thing, assuming the assurances are genuine."

According to a survey conducted by the Nablus-based Centre for Palestine Research and Studies just prior to the Washington signing ceremony, 70 per cent of Palestinians support continued peace talks with Israel.

"I really want this peace agreement to work," Hoshi said. "I want to be able to go out with my friends — I have both Jewish and Arab friends — but there is just too much fear at the moment. Really, this agreement is a step in the right direction." Another young Palestinian, a restaurant worker who asked that his name not be used, agreed.

"I think this is a very good agreement because it provides us with what we need. My friends and I really want peace. Right now, we don't really live; we need to have the chance to live, to have some freedom."

Rabin pleads for Pollard

CJN News Services

WASHINGTON — Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin last week appealed directly to U.S. President Bill Clinton for the early release of convicted spy for Israel Jonathan Pollard, the White House confirmed.

Presidential spokesperson Mike McCurry said Rabin raised the issue during a meeting soon after the signing of the Oslo 2 accords with the Palestinians.

Clinton "indicated he would review the case properly if he received a clemency petition," McCurry said.

Last year, Clinton refused to commute Pollard's life sentence, imposed in 1987 for passing classified U.S. information to Israel.

McCurry said the Pollard case had been "a regular subject on the agenda" of meetings between U.S. and Israeli officials.

McCurry added that Clinton had not received any clemency recommendations. "As a result of that, he can't make any decision in the Pollard case. He also made it clear the parole board hasn't forwarded to him any matter of consideration."

Parole hearing

Pollard is due for a parole hearing sometime next month.

In the meantime, Israeli reports said Rabin requested that Clinton free Pollard as a parallel gesture to Israel's release of some 2,000 Arab security prisoners.

Clinton was reported to have replied that he would consider the request in the event Pollard's parole is denied.

Speaking on Israeli television last weekend, Pollard's Toronto-based wife Esther said she and her husband are grateful to Rabin. However, "the only way to effect Jonathan's release is immediate commutation of his sentence."

Esther Pollard said she has been advised by "top legal experts" that there is "no possibility" her husband will be paroled.

In that event, it would be "much more difficult" for Clinton to pardon him and it would be "political suicide" for the president to do so in an election year.

(Toronto General Hospital and Toronto Western Hospital)

SHIFF FAMILY MEDICAL EDUCATION ASSISTANCE FUND – 1996/1997

The purpose of the Shiff Family Medical Education Assistance Fund is to assist those Israeli physicians interested in doing research or obtaining specialized clinical experience at the Toronto Hospital in Toronto. The Toronto Hospital comprises the Toronto General and the Toronto Western Hospitals and is a major teaching hospital of the University of Toronto. The fund is open to both staff doctors and senior trainees from Israel who wish to come to Toronto for a one or two year period or for a sabbatical. The physician must then return to Israel.

Applicants will be expected to have already been accepted by a senior staff member at the Toronto Hospital who would oversee his or her work and who would be responsible for providing the basic salary.

Applications for additional financial support should be submitted by November 15, 1995 and should be addressed to:

The Interim Agreement — a watershed event

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — The Interim Agreement for extending Palestinian self-rule in the West Bank effectively brings 28 years of Israeli civil administration of the region to an end.

A key provision of the 400-page accord calls for the election of an 82-member Palestinian Council, after the redeployment of the Israel Defence Force (IDF) from Palestinian cities and towns across the West Bank. Once the council is inaugurated, the Israeli civil administration in the West Bank will be dissolved.

The 82-member Palestinian Council will have legislative powers. Executive powers will be vested in a separate Executive Authority, which will include council members and appointed officials. There will be separate elections for the Palestinian Council and the Executive Authority.

Other principal features of the Interim Agreement include:

• Israeli Redeployments: The Israel Defence Force will withdraw from six West Bank population centres — Nablus, Jenin, Tulkarm, Kalkilya, Ramallah and Bethlehem — designated as "Area A" by Israeli and Palestinian negotiators.

In the West Bank town of Hebron, special arrangements will apply to allow the IDF to remain in the sections of the town where Jewish settlers reside.

The IDF will also redeploy from 450 Arab villages and towns in the West Bank, known as "Area B."

The IDF redeployments will be completed in Areas A and B by March 1996, by which time Israel will complete construction of a bypass road that will enable Jewish settlers in Hebron to drive to Jerusalem without passing through built-up Palestinian areas.

In other sections of the West Bank — known as "Area C" and comprising unpopulated areas, Jewish settlements and areas of strategic importance to Israel — the IDF will engage in further redeployments at six-month intervals after the inauguration of the elected Palestinian Council.

• Security: The Palestinian Council will have full responsibility for internal security and public order, as well as full civil responsibilities, in Area A.

In Area B, the Palestinian Council will be charged with maintaining public order and will have full authority over civilian affairs, while Israel will have overall security authority to safeguard its citizens and to combat terrorism.

Israel will retain full responsibility for security and public order in Area C.

• Palestinian Elections: Arab residents of eastern Jerusalem will be able to participate in the elections, which will take place 22 days after the completion of the IDF redeployment from Palestinian population centres.

A Palestinian resident of eastern Jerusalem may run for office in the elections only if he or she has an additional valid address in the West Bank or Gaza Strip.

• Prisoner Releases: Israel will release some 3,000 Palestinian prisoners in two phases. The first will take place upon the signing of the agreement in Washington; the second, on the eve of Palestinian elections.

The two sides also agreed that a third release would take place "according to other principles which will be established separately."

• Palestinian Covenant: Within two months after the elections, the Palestinian Council is to revoke those articles in the covenant calling for the destruction of Israel.

• Palestinian Police: The two sides agreed to the establishment of a 12,000-member Palestinian police force, which will constitute the only Palestinian security force in the West Bank.

• Religious Sites: Responsibility over religious sites in the West Bank and Gaza will be transferred to the Palestinians. Both sides agreed to protect the sites, to allow free access to them and to provide freedom of worship at the sites for members of all faiths.

Special arrangements to guarantee freedom of access and worship were negotiated with regard to Rachel's Tomb in Bethlehem and Joseph's Tomb in Nablus.

Israeli control over the Tomb of the Patriarchs in Hebron will remain in effect.

• Observers: The Palestinian elections will be open to international observers, in an effort to ensure that the voting is free and fair.

A temporary international observer presence will be established in Hebron to monitor security and human rights issues.

• Water: Israel agreed to increase the amount of water allocated to West Bank Palestinians by 28 million cubic metres. Any other addition in allocations to either side will be based on an increase in the available water resources.

• Incitement: Israel and the Palestinians agreed to use all the legal means at their disposal to prevent incitement on the part of groups or individuals.

They also agreed that their educational systems would act to advance the cause of peace among Israelis and Palestinians.

Palestinians pessimistic about peace: survey

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — A poll has found that almost 60 per cent of Palestinians do not expect a lasting peace with Israel, but almost 50 per cent are optimistic about the future, and 70 per cent support continued negotiations.

The survey, conducted by the Nablus-based Centre for Palestine Research and Studies before agreement was reached this month on Phase II of the Oslo accords, showed more than 66 per cent thought the Palestinian Authority (PA) was headed in the right direction.

Support for PA chairman Yasser Arafat was up to 54 per cent, after dipping below 50 per cent in July. Support for Hamas leader Ahmed Yassin was also up from 13 per cent to 17 per cent.

The number of those who said they would participate in the Palestinian council elections increased from 68 per cent to 74 per cent.

More than 97 per cent supported the right to freedom of speech, and 86 per cent preferred elections over appointments to political positions. Both figures are up from previous polls.

On armed attacks, one in four opposed attacks against settlers and soldiers, and three in four opposed attacks against Israeli civilians.

Eighteen per cent of respondents support attacks against civilians.

There was an increase in support of union with Jordan, from 29 per cent in March to 37.4 per cent in September.

The poll surveyed 1,190 adults and has a margin of error of three percentage points.

Group seeks permission to pray on Temple Mount

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — An ultranationalist Jewish group last week petitioned the Israeli High Court of Justice for permission to pray on the Temple Mount during Yom Kippur and Sukkot.

The petitioners, from the Temple Mount Faithful, argued that their right to enter the complex was protected under freedom of worship laws.

The Temple Mount is the location of the First and Second temples, the holiest Jewish site. It also is home to Islam's third holiest site, the Al-Aksa Mosque, where the Koran says the prophet Mohammed ascended to heaven on a white steed.

Members of the Temple Mount Faithful seek to restore the temple.

In July, the court allowed the group to enter the Temple Mount complex on Tisha B'Av, which commemorates the destruction of the First and Second temples.

But police closed down the site after Muslims tried to confront Jews there.

After riots on the Temple Mount in October 1990 resulted in the deaths of 17 Palestinians, police barred Jews from worshiping there during Jewish holidays.

Kayaker strikes gold

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Chances are when the staff at Camp Hatikvah added canoeing to their list of summertime activities, they didn't expect they'd help produce a national champion.

But the British Columbia Jewish camp has done just that, as alumnus Dari Fisher has gone from splashing around in a placid Okanagan Valley lake to the medal podium at the recent Canadian Canoe and Kayak Racing Championships in Welland, Ont.

Fisher, 17, earned two gold medals as a member of B.C.'s K-4 (four-man) team that won the 1,000-metre and the 200-m events.

The four-man crew included Canadian and former world champion Renn Critchlow, as well as Greg Redman and Mike Krol.

Earlier in the summer, Fisher and Krol competed together in the Western Canadian Games and won gold medals in the K-2 (two-man kayak) 500-m and 1,000-m races. They grabbed a silver in the K-4 500-m as well.

Quite a summer for someone who's just entered Grade 12 at Burnaby Central High School, located in a suburb of Vancouver.

Fisher is enrolled in the school's athletic visual and performing arts program, designed to accomodate the rigorous training schedules of top-ranked athletes.

Over the course of six days a week, Fisher spends about 25 hours training in Burnaby Lake, working on his strength and technique. He trains with members of the Canadian national team who, recognizing his great potential, have taken him under their wing, says his father, Robert.

Dari is modest about his accomplishments, though when pressed, he acknowledges he's among an elite group of Canadian kayakers.

Five years ago, he was just like any other youthful camper, enjoying recreational canoeing at Camp Hatikvah. But he quickly outgrew the leisure aspects of the sport and, hoping for a greater challenge, he joined a club and entered the world of competitive racing.

He also switched to the kayak, with its twin-paddled oar and sitting position, from the canoe's single-paddle oar and kneeling position.

Fisher has progressed rapidly up the rowing ladder, winning numerous awards in regattas along the West Coast. In July 1994, he won two gold (in the 200-m and 500-m K-1 races), one silver and two bronze medals in Flat Water Sprint Kayak Racing in the British Columbia Games in Kelowna.

The Canadian Canoe Association named him 1994 Athlete of the Year for the Pacific region.

He continued to progress in 1995, and in May, he came in second in the 500-m and 1,000-m K-1 events at the U.S. Canoe and Kayak World Junior Trials, in Seattle, Wash.

At six foot three, 200 pounds, Fisher can develop the power and smooth stroke the sport demands. It's a highly competitive discipline and the fact that he's Jewish and excels at what he does has irked some of his contemporaries.

In what seems like a throwback to an earlier era, Fisher has experienced overt anti-Semitism from young kayakers, jealous of his skill and worried that Fisher, not they, will grab a national spotlight.

"I've dealt with a little anti-Semitism here," he said in a telephone interview from Vancouver. "I'm the only Jewish guy on the team. Sometimes it's jokes, sometimes it's more."

At the national championships in Welland, he and some teammates got into a pushing and shoving match and several "tried to hold me down so I would use up my energy."

Fisher said it's mostly younger, "ignorant" teammates who've harassed him, but all it's done is make him work harder. He hasn't told his coach about the incidents, choosing to handle the situation himself. But he has written about it in a school essay, linking it to the experiences described to him by his grandfather, a survivor of the Holocaust.

Fisher, a graduate of Vancouver Talmud Torah, said one of the most memorable events in his life was participating in the 1994 March of the Living in Poland and Israel. "It was amazing," he said.

Fisher would like to see kayaking become a Maccabiah Games sport but in the meantime, he's looking ahead to the Canadian team trials next May and the national championships in Dartmouth, N.S., in August 1996. Ultimately, he'd like to represent Canada at the 2000 Olympics.

After all, he says, kayakers don't reach their peak until they're 25 or 26.

Survivors tell their stories in words and music

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Violinist-composer Shony Alex Braun was shot and left to die in Dachau. Artist Sophia Chatov was separated from her parents at the age of six and hidden for 2½ years.

Holocaust survivors Braun and Chatov told their stories through words and music at The Spirit of Survival, an evening of music and art sponsored by the Canadian Holocaust Remembrance Association and co-chaired by Harriet Morton and Sylvia Shawn.

Buffalo television producer-moderator Linda Pollack of CBS's Jewish View was the MC for the event attended by about 300 people at the Leah Posluns Theatre.

Braun performed Hebrew classics, works by Chopin and Brahms, and his own compositions and arrangements.

His Symphony of the Holocaust, an opus he began composing in Dachau, was nominated for the 1994 Pulitzer Prize in music. His final piece, a dramatic rendition of the Lark, was followed by the singing of Hatikvah led by Cantor Joseph Cooper.

Born in Romania, Braun was already an accomplished violinist at the age of 13 when he and his parents were sent to Dachau. He was the only member of his family to survive.

After liberation, he emigrated to the United States and settled in the Los Angeles area with his wife Shari, also a survivor. The couple has a son and daughter.

In addition to his performing career as a violin soloist — he currently plays with the Dayton Philharmonic and the Scotsdale and New Mexico symphonies — Braun has made nine recordings and has composed 200 pieces of music.

Chatov, a resident of Buffalo, embarked on her art career in 1972. Much of her work reflects her Holocaust experience as a hidden child, when she was hidden in 12 different households and came "to feel abandoned by my parents."

Her Memorial to the Lost Jewish Community of Amsterdam, shown recently at the Anne Frank exhibit in Williamsville, N.Y., was on display along with other works at the Leah Posluns Centre.

Chatov, who trained as a physiotherapist, lived in Israel before immigrating to the United States in 1966. She met her husband in 1970 and has two sons.

Only 15,000 of the 150,000 Jews living in Holland in 1940 survived the war, she said in her talk. "I and my direct family were in the lucky 10 per cent."

Schools to tour museum

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — Class tours for school groups will be held Oct. 23 to Dec. 14 at the Holocaust Education Centre.

Students will view a two-part exhibit. One, We Were Children Then: Vancouver Child Survivors Remember, was locally developed, presenting the stories, photographs and artifacts of child survivors living in the Vancouver area.

The other exhibit, How Their Hearts Must Have Trembled, is a photographic overview of the fate of children during the Holocaust.

Under direction of Frieda Miller, education coordinator of the centre, a number of voluntary educators have been specially trained as docents to explain the exhibits.

Each class of 30 students and their teacher will have a guide — some able to speak French for the benefit of French immersion classes.

A teacher's guide, prepared by Miller, was sent out in advance to help prepare students for the tour. It says "tens of thousands of the Holocaust child victims were Gypsies and handicapped children. The great majority were Jewish. Only 1.1 per cent of Jewish children alive at the beginning of World War II in Europe survived to the conclusion."

Admission fee for the Oct. 23 to Dec. 14 exhibit is $50 for 30 students.

Eye on Arts

by Bill Gladstone

Book News: Patricia Starr, former political mover and shaker, recently celebrated the publication (Stoddart) of her second book, Deadly Justice, a novel that the Toronto Star called "a steamy roman à clef." Her first book, published by Stoddart in 1993, was Tempting Fate: A Cautionary Tale of Power and Politics, a non-fiction account of her political misadventures.

Stephen Humphrey Bogart, the son of actors Humphrey Bogart and the Jewish Lauren Bacall, has written a biography and a mystery novel — Bogart: In Search of My Father and Play It Again, respectively. Both were given a warm reception in the New York Times Book Review recently. The offscreen chemistry of Bacall and Bogart was apparently as great as it was on-screen in such classics as To Have And To Have Not, in which the author's mother asked his father, "You know how to whistle, don't you, Steve?"

Spanning all the major political events of this century, Harvey and Myrna Frommer's Growing Up Jewish In America is an oral history along the lines of their previous books It Happened in Brooklyn and It Happened in the Catskills. Their latest is due from Harcourt Brace in November.

Holocaust Art: An exhibit of 26 oil-on-linen paintings by artist Laurie Seaman depicting scenes of the Holocaust opened recently at the London Regional Art and Historical Museums in London, Ont. Said the Globe and Mail: "Deceptively simple but powerfully suggestive, these combinations of portraiture and still-life remind us not only that the Holocaust was real, but that it lives among us, still."

Film News: Toronto actor Lori Alter's most recent film appearance is in the currently-playing National Lampoon: Senior Trip. She has appeared in Andrew Lloyd Webber's Aspects of Love and many other productions of live theatre, TV and film. Dividing her time between Toronto and Los Angeles, Alter has been in the recording studio recently, working on a CD of original music. Evidently, she comes from a musical family — her father heads the Murray Alter Band.

The next offering of the Toronto Jewish Film Society is The Light Ahead, a 1939 American film in Yiddish with English subtitles. Based on the writings of Mendele Mocher Sforim, this charming tale is about two poor lovers in 19th century Russia and the wise old bookseller who helps them. Art Gallery of Ontario, Jackman Hall, Oct. 22 at 4.30 & 7.30 p.m. $7 at the door. Co-presented with The Friends of Yiddish.

Musical Notes: As he assembles this week's column, your Eye On Arts scribe has been listening to a new double CD of Debussy Preludes, Livres 1 et 2, performed by the astonishingly talented Canadian pianist Francine Kay. "Poetic brilliance" is how the Toronto Star described Kay's debut recital in Toronto in 1987. Kay, who is Jewish, ranks among Canada's finest pianists and performs regularly in Canada and Europe. Her inaugural recording, on the IBS/Audio Ideas label, is all the more remarkable in that it features exquisite pieces of Debussy requiring special interpretive sensitivity.

Francine Kay

Children's folksinger Adela Gerner is preparing a sing-along of Hebrew music for performance to school children, between Sukkot and Chanukah. Songs include Hallelluya, Yerushalaim Shel Zahav and Hatikva. For more information, phone 416-636-7062.

Music in the Concentration Camps, a presentation by ethnomusicologist Krystyna Henke, features slides, music, interview clips and the memoirs of trumpeter and Auschwitz survivor Lex van Weren. Presented by the Canadian Association for the Advancement of Netherlandic Studies, 416-264-4932. Dec. 8, 8 p.m., Dept. of Germanic Studies, second floor, U. of T., 97 St. George St., Toronto.

Chutzpah Held Over: Corny and clever, David Gale's and Randy Vancourt's Chutzpah a Go-Go has been held over at the Limelight Dinner Theatre, Toronto, until Nov. 12. 416-482-5200.

Magazine Watch: Profiled recently in these pages, Evan Solomon, editor of the Toronto media lifestyle magazine Shift, isn't revealing the cash value of the five-year deal that Shift recently inked with Rogers-owned Maclean Hunter for a 10 per cent interest in the technojournal. Solomon recently helped produce a series of Shift Media Minutes for CBC Newsworld, and helped establish a site for the magazine on the World-Wide Web.

Accidental Title: Due to a transmission error, the title of Robert Fulford's latest book was misstated in a recent column. It is Accidental City: The Transformation of Toronto, published recently by Walter, Mcfarlane and Ross.

Business Profile

Miles Nadal: CEO of MDC Corporation

Entrepreneur's 'hobby' generates millions

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Miles Nadal, 37, president and CEO of MDC Corporation, turned a hobby he learned at summer camp into a multi-million dollar business.

Nadal took up photography when he was a camper at White Pines and at the age of 16, he parleyed it into a business, photographing groups of campers. Six years later he had a roster of 10,000 campers a summer.

In 1980, he left York University, where he was studying marketing and finance, to formally launch Action Photographics, a commercial photography studio. Over the next 15 years he expanded the business to include a wide range of marketing and communications services.

Today Multi-Discipline Communications (MDC) Corporation, rated by the Globe & Mail Report on Business magazine as one of the 25 fastest growing companies in the country, is a publicly-traded conglomerate of 23 companies employing 1,700 people with projected sales of $210 million for 1995.

The head office of MDC, a tastefully decorated three-storey brownstone in Yorkville filled with contemporary art, could easily be mistaken for an art gallery. Nadal, a serious collector of contemporary art, has amassed an extensive private collection, he told The CJN recently.

He rhapsodized about some of his favorite artists, such as British sculptress Barbara Hepworth, whose work was the subject of major retrospective at the Art Gallery of Ontario this summer. In celebration of its 15th anniversary MDC sponsored this exhibit.

"Given MDC corporation's inextricable link with the visual arts, it was fitting for the company to sponsor the Hepworth exhibit," Nadal said.

A ceramic plate with a picture of a fish hangs inconspicuously in a corner of the board room. Created by Pablo Picasso in 1952, the plate, titled the Big Fish, was a gift from Lawrence Bloomberg in 1993 after his company First Marathon Securities underwrote $36 million worth of MDC shares.

MDC has raised a total of $80 million since it went public in 1987. The first public offering brought $3 million into the company's coffers. Nadal was 29.

He attributed his success to his upbringing. "I came from a home that was rich in love but humble economically. My parents instilled a strong work ethic in me and my brother, Sheldon.

"They encouraged us to be innovative. We were always enterprising young men. I was an entrepreneur at the age of 10."

At 10, he had several newspaper routes and by the time he turned 13, he was photographing commercial buildings for a real estate company, he said.

In 1980, Nadal employed professional photographers for Action Photographics, while he focused on marketing.

"My skills in marketing and finance were better than my technical skills as a photographer," he said.

With the hiring of a graphic artist in 1985, the company began to produce catalogues and brochures. The following year, Nadal started MDC Public Relations, a firm offering speech writing, photography and the production of annual reports.

He said he expanded into interrelated areas to provide a more comprehensive service to his clients because he "saw that people were looking for the convenience of a full service with specialized expertise."

Through acquisitions and internal growth, Nadal increased the range of services provided by MDC to include financial and corporate communications, marketing, advertising, sale promotions, audiovisual, video production and specialty printing.

Accumark Production Inc., Black Diamond Incentives Ltd., Globe Graphic Communications, Jeffrey Elliott Communications Inc. and Viewpoint are some of the 15 marketing and communication companies controlled by MDC.

They are "stand-alone independent companies. The managers all have equity in their companies and participate as partners," Nadel explained. "The equity gives them a vested interest in the success of the firm."

With $50 million in sales, marketing and communications services make up one division of MDC. The other two divisions, security and specialty printing, and direct marketing and home shopping generate $50 million and $110 million in sales respectively.

In February 1994, MDC paid $500,000 to acquire Ashton-Potter, a Mississauga-based security printing company with a plant in the United States. The parent company was in financial difficulty, Nadal said.

"Normally we don't buy turn-around or starts-ups, but we could see value in the company. We already had a presence in specialty printing. Security was a great opportunity that we uncovered."

Since purchasing Ashton-Potter, MDC has invested in state of the art printing equipment. The plant in Williamsville, N.Y., has the capacity to produce six million stamps an hour. Today Ashton-Potter (U.S.A.) is the largest private producer of stamps in North America and the largest outside supplier of postage stamps to the United States Postal Service (USPS).

The company was recently awarded two major contracts: a $170-million five-year contract with the USPS to produce eight million stamps a year and one with Canada Post Corporation valued at $24.1 million for four billion stamps over a five-year period.

The Ashton-Potter facility can also produce security documents like stock and bond certificates, cheques, travellers cheques, passports and lottery tickets, a market Nadal plans to develop, he said.

In September 1994, MDC acquired Regal Greetings and Gift Inc., Canada's largest non-retail mail order company. Regal sells household products, giftware and greeting cards. It is the Canadian licensee for the Disney, Childcraft and Early Learning catalogues.

Under the auspices of its new parent company, Regal took over A.E. McKenzie Company Ltd., Canada's largest packaged seed company. McKenzie has 65 per cent of the Canadian market, supplying 10,000 nurseries, as well as operating the largest mail order catalogue seed business in the country.

Commenting on the future, Nadal said he plans on further expanding the three divisions of MDC. "Our goal is to be a $500-million company in the next five years."

He admitted that running a company the size of MDC is very demanding. "The company is a complex business. I have outstanding managers, but it's still a lot of responsibility for me, even with this great infrastructure."

Despite his busy schedule, Nadal finds time for volunteer work. He's on the board of directors and chairs the Young Leadership program at Mount Sinai Hospital and he's on the board of the Canadian Society for the Weizmann Institute of Science.

Balancing his priorities is a challenge — the business is a seven-day-a-week operation, he said. "The business is part of the family. I'm fortunate to have a supporting wife."

The credenza in Nadal's third-floor office is covered with pictures of his wife, Joanne, and their children, Sarah, 5, and Samantha, 3. "This is the only photography I have time for these days," he said, pointing proudly to the pictures of his daughters.

Nature Walks in Toronto: While it has burgeoned into a vast metropolis, Toronto still retains a network of pristine ravines that provide breathing space, recreational parks and respite from the urban landscape.

Even at the city's bustling Bloor-Yonge intersection, the country is not far off. A short distance northeast is the Rosedale Valley Road, a well-treed avenue that follows a branch of the Rosedale ravine and gives the illusion of a rural setting. A bit further on, at the Bayview Extension, the road connects to the green corridor of the Don River, through which hikers can wander southward to the waterfront, northward to Alexander Muir Park at Yonge and Lawrence — or even right up to Steeles Avenue, provided they're prepared to cross a few streets and golf courses.

"We're blessed, we're extremely fortunate to have this extensive system of river valleys that runs right through the city," says Frank Kershaw, an official in Metropolitan Toronto's Department of Parks and Culture. "These deep ravines can't be built in because they're floodwater zones; so they serve as a living legacy for the public to enjoy."

Never more beautiful than in autumn, Toronto's deeply-carved ravine systems are a boon for nature enthusiasts, who report such species as white-tailed deer, snapping turtles, foxes, beavers, minks, muskrats, skunks and red squirrels. A magnet for walkers, joggers and cyclists, Toronto's extensive greenbelts are to Canada's largest city what Mount Royal Park is to Montreal or Stanley Park is to Vancouver.

A good spot to enter the ravine that dissects the posh inner-city neighborhood of Rosedale is behind the Summerhill subway station, at the end of Shaftesbury Avenue.

Other midtown branches of the Don River valley system include Todmorden Mills Park, Moore Park and the Cedarvale-Nordheimer ravine, which crosses beneath Spadina Avenue above Casa Loma. Many hikers loop through the historic Mount Pleasant Cemetery which adjoins the Moore Park and Summerhill ravines.

The Beltline Railway, a commuter railroad that served Forest Hill briefly in the 1890s, has been transformed into a popular walking, jogging and cycling track; it runs a few blocks above Eglinton Ave. The western section between Allen Rd. and Bathurst St. traverses an ordinary urban landscape, but the trail becomes nicely festooned with overhanging greenery as it approaches the Davisville subway station to the east.

By the waterfront, people may find respite from the urban landscape at the Leslie Street spit. Built to meet a projected need for more shipping facilities, the 5-kilometre-long spit was turned over to the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority in the late 1950s. Today, it is home to several large colonies of gulls and herons and some 400 species of plant life.

In High Park, a large green space southwest of Bloor and Keele, naturalists point out the provincially rare black oak savannah, characterized by a number of prairie and savannah grasses that have all but disappeared in southern Ontario. Rare plants include blazing star and the sassafras tree. Further afield, city dwellers may escape the urban jungle by visiting the Scarborough Bluffs and Bluffer's Park, Highland Creek, and the parks and trails of the Rouge Valley and the Humber River.

Metro Toronto's Department of Parks and Property publishes a good map of nature trails and parks. For a free copy, write to Stn. 1240, 24th Floor, Metro Hall, 55 John St., Toronto M5V 3C6; phone 416-392-8186. As well, the Toronto Field Naturalists offers about 150 guided nature walks annually; phone 416-968-6255.

For further reference, consult The Hike Ontario Guide to Walks Around Toronto, by Brad Cundiff (Stoddart, $14.95) or Great Country Walks Around Toronto, by Elliott Katz (Great North Books, $3.95), both available at city bookstores.

The province of Ontario operates a toll-free hotline that provides information on the best spots for viewing the changing colors of leaves across the province. Phone 1-800-ONTARIO, or 416-314-0944 in Toronto.

Unless otherwise stated, all currencies are in Canadian dollars.

Nice Performance

JERUSALEM — Nice Systems achieved a nominal yield of 129.7 per cent, making it the best performing stock traded on the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange (TASE) in 5755, Bank Hapoalim reported.

The electronics company is traded on the Two-Sided market. Hapoalim looked at the performance of shares traded on the TASE between Sept.4, 1994 and Sept.18, 1995. The TASE had a mixed year with the General Share Index down 2.65 per cent in nominal terms.

Russia-Israel Telecommunications Deal

JERUSALEM — Communications Ministry director-general Shlomo Wachs recently initialed a cooperation agreement with Russia in the fields of telecommunications and postal services.

The final accord will be reached when the Russian communications minister visits in November. The agreement will bring about commercial cooperation between the two countries, reductions in rates, and exchanges of information and experts.

Dear Ella,

Another holiday has passed and once again I had to sit through a meal and listen endlessly to one of my relatives.

This person is the only one that has children, the only one that works and the only one in the whole world who is exhausted. This person loves herself and makes sure we all know it.

The day of the get-together I get myself into such a state. I yell at my family and am totally miserable the whole day. No matter how hard I try, I always get into this state. Please help as another Jewish holiday is approaching and my blood pressure continues to rise.

Restless on the holidays

Dear Restless on the holidays,

There is obviously a reason you are going to these get togethers. Possibly you want to be with your other relatives on the High Holy Days, possibly it is important to you to instil a feeling of tradition and family in your own children. Whatever the reason is, it is more important than your annoying relative or you wouldn't be there at all.

Your relative's problems should not affect the overall reason for your enjoying the holidays with your family. Chances are you will not change her, so change your focus. Enjoy being with the rest of your family, enjoy the warm feelings of closeness and tradition. Feel lucky that you have a family that you can share the holidays with.

You can't pick, nor can you change your relatives, so for your own sake, change your perspective and watch your mood and blood pressure take a turn for the better.

Readers may submit their questions to Ella at The CJN. But Ella is not a professional counsellor. She brings to the questions posed by readers her unique brand of earthy wisdom. Her advice is not a replacement for medical, legal or any other advice. For serious problems, consult a professional.

Another step taken on route to return of Swiss accounts

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

GENEVA — A recent meeting between world Jewish leaders and Swiss bankers has been called the "first step" toward returning Swiss accounts of Holocaust victims to their rightful heirs.

The recent effort to reclaim the accounts, however, is not the first.

Switzerland, known for its banks' premium on privacy, issued a decree in 1962 making it possible to relax that privacy temporarily, in order to find the accounts of Nazi victims and distribute the assets to the proper heirs.

Despite the decree, Swiss banks refused to release the deposits to relatives without proper documentation and accurate account numbers, much of which vanished during and after the war.

"I want my country to show civil courage," says Verena Grandelmeier, who brought the issue before Switzerland's parliament earlier this year. "I regret that Switzerland did not do all it could in the '60s, when the actual victims were yet alive.

"We have to safeguard the ethic and moral of Switzerland's reputation as a banking country," she added.

Gerhard Riegner of the World Jewish Congress (WJC) office here said the Jewish community and Israel did not apply enough pressure on Swiss banks in 1962.

He recalled the case of a Jewish man from Frankfurt who set up an account. The man died in the Holocaust. When family members went to claim the man's funds, the Swiss wanted them to produce a death certificate and show that they were the rightful heirs to the money.

The documentation problem still exists, but Jewish officials are working with Swiss bankers.

The Swiss Bankers Association announced Sept. 12 that $34.1 million has been found in what may be secret accounts of Holocaust victims and that more funds could be uncovered. Some of the funds could belong to non-Jews.

In the recent announcement, the bankers, who have responded to intense pressure from Israel, Jewish groups and Holocaust survivors, said an independent office would be set up to help relatives of Holocaust victims search for accounts.

The association also said Switzerland would refrain from invoking its 10-year statute of limitations on dormant accounts.

Earlier last month, representatives of the bankers association met with a Jewish delegation that included WJC President Edgar Bronfman; Avraham Burg, head of the Jewish Agency for Israel; and members of the Swiss Jewish community.

What's Wrong With Jewish Education

by William Abrams

Having been involved in Jewish education for over forty years, and having served for four years as the Adult Education Chairman for North America of the United Synagogue for Conservative Judaism, I have lost track of the number of conferences I have attended on the relentless rise of intermarriage. What I do remember, however, is that every single conference ended with a call for "more Jewish education".

There has, in fact, been a definite increase in the number of Jewish children who have been exposed to Jewish education, particularly in our Day Schools, which have grown rapidly in the past 30 years. Unfortunately, all this appears to have had little or no effect on the increase on the rate of intermarriage except among the Orthodox. Many explanations have been offered during the various conferences for this stubborn fact, but despite the recent growth in the number of adherents to Orthodoxy, their percentage of the total number of Jews in North America remains comparatively small. We cannot therefore expect that this trend will stem the rising tide of intermarriage.

Perhaps the time has come for us to examine the content of Jewish education itself and also the underlying assumption that increased knowledge of our religion and our traditions will automatically lead to an increased desire to remain Jewish despite the remarkable change in the general society towards Jews, who are now accepted as equal members of the secular society which now prevails in North America.

Jewish Education Oriented Toward Children

We must start our examination by analyzing what is actually being taught in our schools and to whom. The first fact that emerges is that our educational system is oriented toward children under Bar Mitzvah age. A few schools for post-Bar Mitzvah education do exist but their total number of pupils is too small to radically change the pattern of intermarriage. The most striking fact of all is that for teenagers of college age, practically nothing in the way of serious and structured education exists except for students who attend Jewish Studies Programs at college.

Next we must ask ourselves: what Jewish values do these Jewish Studies Programs at college actually teach? Here we reach the nub of the problem; society has changed drastically during the last 50 years but the curricula of the Jewish studies programs remains as it has been taught throughout the centuries – the focus being on classical Halachic commentaries. More recently Holocaust studies have been added.

We must also remember that current events in the Jewish world impinge on the developing Jewish conscience of our youth. Because these events are well recorded in our excellent national newspaper, the Canadian Jewish News, this presents to those of our youth who are interested an opportunity for informal Jewish education. Today the most intensively reported subject is undeniably Israel, closely followed by antisemitism and Holocaust, and therefore the front page of the Canadian Jewish News is almost always dedicated to one or more of these three subjects, none of which delineates an ongoing positive Jewish life within Canada. Rarely do we see a story about Canadian Jewish life on the front page, unless there is a scandal or a controversy to report.

William Abrams is Editor of Viewpoints, and was the founding Chair of the Canadian Council for Conservative Judaism. He lives in Montreal.

"FLORAL ARRANGEMENT" BY GHITA ROLL, MONTREAL

The reaction of our college-age youth to all of this is illustrated by the following two quotations.

College Age Youth Quoted

The first is an extract of a letter to Canadian Jewish News of December 15, 1994 written by Dana Demb: "As a young north-American Jew, my Jewish experiences differ greatly from those of my grandparents and even parents. I was not alive during the Holocaust. I did not experience pogroms, nor was I expelled from my country. I have not suffered anti-Semitism and I am allowed by law to practise my religion. The new generation of Jews cannot thrive on victimization and self-pity. It is the age of pride. Displayed on campus are posters affirming gay-pride, black-pride; the Jewish-pride posters are nowhere to be found but are replaced with advertisements for a 'Why the Jews?' lecture. Is this the way to maintain Jewish continuity? Who wants to be part of a culture that only suffers?"

The second quote is an extract of a speech delivered by Joey Felson to the Canadian Jewish Congress Plenary in May, 1992: "Most college students are not getting involved with the community, and quite frankly this is because the community does not attract them. Students are not interested in the big, gala dinners. They are interested in understanding why it is important to be Jewish, and it is very rare to find someone who can properly articulate why we students should seek our own identity. There is a lot of cynicism around campus among Jewish students. We can't understand why it is important to keep all those rituals. We are looking for someone who can give us some meaning and purpose to our lives, to give us an ideology."

Skewed View Of Judaism

These quotes indicate the possibility that our youth may be forming a skewed view of Judaism. As Felson points out, they may question the need for the many rituals dealt with in Halakkah; or, as Demb points out, they may react negatively to what they perceive is an unduly lachrymose version of Jewish history based on events they did not experience and do not expect to experience in their lifetime.

I have presented these two quotes because in addition to articulating the reasons for the dissatisfaction with the Jewish education they have received, they also indicate what needs to be done to cause our curricula to reflect the world view currently held by young Jewish adults.

We must start by harking back to 70 AD, when the destruction of the Second Temple left Jews in complete disarray. Rabbi Akiva developed the concept of a synagogue, where rituals (taking the place of sacrifices) could be used to maintain Jewish identity, and most important – Jewish hope.

Our sages then developed the concept of a Moshiach who would come to deliver us some time in the future from our state of helplessness and lead us back to our homeland. The role of the Jews was to refrain from sin and follow the rituals and prayers developed for the synagogue. This was all that could be expected from the helpless minority of Jews in the Diaspora, and these rituals and prayers did succeed in preserving Jewish identity and solidarity for 2000 years until the present century.

Increase Support For Social Action

As Demb explains, circumstances in the outside world vis-à-vis the Jews have now changed so drastically in our favour that such a passive theology no longer resonates among the healthy, affluent, well-educated young Jewish adults of today. They are not satisfied with the classical theological concept I have outlined above. They want to involve themselves now in redeeming the world without waiting for the Moshiach, by engaging in what we today term Social Action to cure the ills of society. In this they can find, they feel, what Felson is asking for: their own identity, and some meaning and purpose to their lives. Such activities are known today as universal Social Action.

EDITOR'S NOTEBOOK

This issue begins with an article by myself called "What's Wrong With Jewish Education?". I attempt to deal with the disturbing fact that Day School education, which has increased considerably across the country in the last two decades, does not appear to have fulfilled our hope that an increased knowledge of Judaism would help to reduce the number of intermarriages. Studies have shown that in a Jewish-Christian marriage, 90% of the families have by the third generation become Christian or completely secular. I have attempted to analyze these disappointing results and the reasons are complex. I conclude by advocating a major effort to explain to our young adults that the principle of Tikkun Olam, the mending of the world, is inherent in Judaism from its inception and properly understood, can overcome the mistaken notion prevalent among them that Judaism is irrelevant in today's society because it is too self-centered in a world that is becoming more and more universally-minded.

Martin Rudner has sent us an article on a recently formed "Jewish Association for International Development" which has been undertaken to stimulate Jewish initiatives for humanitarian causes throughout the world. He offers quotations from our tradition to support the same point I make in may article (although we did not consult each other), which is that Tzedakah, probably the single most important ethical precept in Judaism, was never meant to be restricted to Jews, but referred to the entire world. He further emphasizes that our involvement must go beyond a mere declaration of ethical principles, but must be supported by organisations, volunteers, and supervision of programs undertaken.

Eugene Kaellis, a regular contributor to Viewpoints, deals in "Jews, Blacks and Québecois" with the mistaken notion that the unfortunate eruptions of Black-White racial strife need not concern us in Canada because "it can't happen here". He explains that these incidents result from the serious socio-economic disadvantages Blacks are attempting to overcome, and points out that despite the gains achieved through the Civil Rights Movement, disadvantages facing Blacks remain unendurable, and when fulfillment falls far behind expectations, violence erupts.

Canadian blacks suffer the same problem as those in the U.S. and despite the fact that Jews have been most active in the Civil Rights Movement, black anti-semitism remains a puzzling and worrisome phenomenon. He suggests that personal ties are the surest ways to undermine cultural stereotypes. The Quebec situation vis-à-vis blacks and Jews is similar but not identical because, aside from the factors already mentioned, the narrow nationalism of some Québecois exacerbates the problem. Nevertheless, he feels that here too, increasing personal ties is the only answer.

Stephen Stern feels that employment equity is an issue that needs further attention. In his view, the phrase is a polite synonym for quotas, which are something Jews always opposed and must continue to do so.

Rabbi Jacob Chinitz takes issue with an article by Isi Liebler, a long-time Zionist leader in Australia, and proceeds to present a number of contradictions he sees in Liebler's position that the Diaspora has helped the development of Israel and that its disappearance would be a tragedy. He goes on to itemize in great detail a number of areas in which the existence of the Diaspora has harmed rather than helped Israel. While not everyone who reads the article would necessarily agree with Chinitz' position, he certainly presents a number of considerations that have never been spelled out in such detail before.

Hugh Segal recognizes that being a lifelong Conservative Jew in Canada where the large majority of Jews have traditionally been Liberal makes him somewhat of a rara avis in Canadian Jewish life. He sets out to explain to us the importance of tolerance of diverse viewpoints in a democracy. He points to Israel where despite living under far more severe pressures than we experience in Canada, Jewish society accepts a very healthy pluralism in which different parties debate their differences vigorously in the Knesset. Here in Canada he warns of the danger of being in the scope of only one political party, particularly since the Dept. of External Affairs has long been known to be following a "traditional Arabist line". We must cherish the freedom to choose our positions on matters of Canadian policy, rather than unthinkingly following the traditional voting habits of previous generations.

Poetry by Glen Rotchin completes the issue.

JEWISH EDUCATION

Jews are actually engaging in Social Action in numbers far greater than their percentage of the total population would lead us to expect. However, they don't consider such actions to be "religious" (which is in itself significant).

Social Action Is Tikkun Olam Updated

We must teach them that the Social Action they want to undertake is simply an updated version of Tikkun Olam which has its roots firmly planted in Jewish theology; thus, when they engage in activities to combat pollution, drugs, proliferation of guns and the like, they re following an authentic Jewish tradition which reaches back to Sinai. There the Jews received not one, but two mandates. First the Ten Commandments commanded them as individuals to lead a more ethical life than was followed by the pagan society around them. Second, their mandate was expanded to include setting an example to the whole world of a pilot people who would be a "light to the nations", thus redeeming the world.

But, Tikkun Olam goes beyond the concept of the Jews being a "pilot people", whose example would encourage other nations to lead more ethical lives. It encompasses the idea that it can actually, by united effort, organize those who have accepted Tikkun Olam to attack directly the evils of society by "consciousness-raising" and joint effort with non-Jews and even lobbying government to take action by legislation, to eliminate profitable but harmful policies of major corporations who cannot be persuaded by polite petitions to change their ways.

It is worth emphasizing that for Jews to even consider lobbying government for other than Jewish causes, is a new and radical idea for us. For almost 2000 years, governments throughout the world have persecuted us so that they became, in our eyes, the "Enemy Camp", (that was the title of the last essay I contributed to Viewpoints, which I borrowed from Jerome Weidman, a very popular Jewish writer of the 1940's). The thought that we would actually approach governments we have always avoided, because we now consider ourselves to be full partners of the society we live in, and want to use Jewish values to improve that society would astonish most Jews over the age of fifty and that reaction itself is the reason that younger Jewish adults accuse our community leaders of being self-centered, inward-looking and irrelevant.

These theological ideas and concepts cannot be taught to twelve-year-olds, and we must therefore exert every effort to establish schools and curricula suited to college-age Jews, for it is during the college years that the elementary Jewish education they acquire during their pre-Bar Mitzvah years is outgrown. All that can be taught in our elementary schools are Jewish rituals, holidays and some history. When these young adults are exposed to more sophisticated teachers at college, the elementary knowledge they have acquired begins to seem superficial and jejune: and since they think that what they were taught at elementary school represents the whole of Judaism, they turn off, setting the stage for intermarriage.

Our community is in the midst of a major effort to preserve Jewish "continuity" and are expending much time and major resources to this end. The purpose of this essay is to alert our community leaders that we must not simply "throw money at the problem" while continuing our educational system in the same direction that appears to have failed to implant a desire to remain proud and knowledgeable Jews in Canada.

I certainly do not mean to imply that our present Jewish studies curriculum be dropped; it is basic to understanding how Judaism developed over the past 2000 years. I am suggesting that we need to study the implications of Tikkun Olam as well in order to offer a well-rounded and relevant Jewish education to our youth.

Jewish Ethical Precepts And International Development

by Martin Rudner

The Case For International Development

JAD (pronounced: "Yad"), the Jewish Association for International Development, is a comparatively recent initiative among Canadian Jewry to support international development. However, Jewish involvement internationally on behalf of humanitarian causes is hardly a novel phenomenon. As we shall underline in this article, Jewish communities and individuals possess a powerful ethical mandate; a mandate given to us by Torah. This mandate imparts both a purpose and an obligation for us to help bring about the alleviation of human suffering, and to work for the betterment of the human condition.

Let me emphasize that for present purposes the Jewish contribution to international development will be defined in terms of the wider humanitarian goals of poverty reduction, economic development, and social improvement in poor countries, as distinct from financial support for Jewish communities here, abroad, or in Israel.

The United Nations Children's Fund recently reported that "More progress in human well-being has been made in the past 50 years than in the previous 2,000." That conclusion may seem incredible to people suffering from economic deprivation, illiteracy, disease and pollution. Yet, the record clearly indicates a substantial improvement in overall human well-being in our generation. This progress in human development reflects the result of economic growth in most, if not all, developing countries, coupled with the assistance provided by international donor agencies. As a result, average human life expectancy has increased from 40 years to 65; adult literacy has doubled to 70%; and infant mortality has dropped from 250 per thousand in the 1950s to less than 100 today. Most telling of all: the proportion of the world's population living in extreme poverty has been reduced from 70% to 32%.

Jewish involvement in development assistance can be traced back at least 3,500 years. As we are told in the Torah, the very first person to identify explicitly as a "Hebrew," who was sold into slavery and taken to Egypt, ended up giving Pharaoh technical advice on creating a buffer stock of food to assist Egypt accumulate seven years of surplus grains in order to sustain a projected seven years of famine. I refer, of course, to Joseph, son of Jacob: the first Hebrew; the favourite among the original twelvesome B'nai Yisrael.

The Jewish Ethical Basis For Development Cooperation

Most of us accept that there exists an ethical basis for community action to try to mitigate human suffering deriving from poverty. This ethic rests on the belief that we, as human beings and as Jews, have an obligation to act. In Judaism, religious obligations imply individual and public actions. Two questions arise:

(1) What actions are we obliged to take to help alleviate poverty to meet human needs?

(2) What is the extent of the obligation upon us to transfer resources to redress inequalities?

The answers to these questions will represent the core principles for Jewish involvement in global poverty alleviation through international development.

"FUGITIVES" BY DAVID FEIST, MONTREAL

Applying The Principle of G'Milut Hassadim

Judaism's answers to these essential ethical questions derive from the very roots of the Jewish tradition: from the Judaic perspective of the relationship between humans and God; from the Torah; and from the writings of our sages. A study of these writings reveals that their precepts involve the entire world.

Jewish Precepts Involve The Entire World

We note that our sages refer to precepts involving the entire World, in its widest humanitarian context, and not simply existing Jewish communities. The late Rabbi Dr. Joseph Hertz, the then Chief Rabbi of the British Empire, wrote that our rabbis considered the alleviation of suffering an obligation incumbent on all Jews, and this obligation had to be observed with respect to all people, precisely "because of their humanity" (Daily Prayer Book, p. 1045; emphasis in the original).

The ethical precepts of Judaism are relevant globally and bind Jews to all of humanity. Torah does not differentiate among peoples in its requirement for human kindness, its regard for human needs, its response to human suffering. The Midrash (Megillah 10) tells of God admonishing his Angels after the Exodus again celebrating at a time when Pharaoh's soldiery drowned in the Reed Sea: "The creations of my hands are drowning in the sea, and you wish to sing praises?" Says the Mishna, quoting Rabbi Akiva: "Beloved is man, for he was created in God's image; it is indicative of a greater the image of God was man created" (Pirkei Avot, 3:18).

Applying The Principle Of Tzedakah

Jews are very familiar with the Mitzvah of Tzedakah virtually as a matter of course. The impact of this Mitzvah on Jewish ethics and behaviour has been profound and widespread. The great medieval philosopher Maimonides, Rabbi Mosheh ben Maimon (HaRambam) [1135-1204] writes in his Mishneh Torah that more than any other positive commandment, Tzedakah represents the ethical essence of Judaism. The Rambam saw in Tzedakah the core attribute of Jewish existence, and the source of future redemption.

"FAMILY OF MIGRANTS" BY DAVID FEIST, MONTREAL

Tzedakah, as a Mitzvah involving the implementation of justice, has the quality of diminishing the inequalities between givers and receivers, economic and social inequalities. Justice, in Torah and in Jewish jurisprudence, is emphatically egalitarian. To what extent egalitarian? The Torah commands that a "corner" of farmland had to be left unharvested, to be reaped by the poor ("peah"). However, it does not define a corner by size. The Rabbis comment that this permits each person to define his own measure of generosity, the size of his "peah", his contribution to Tzedakah, his Mitzvah.

While the Mitzvah of Tzedakah is individually determined in terms of magnitudes, who gives how much, the beneficiaries are equal participants in the Mitzvah. Since the assigned share is legally considered to be the property of the poor, the landowner has no right to decide who should benefit. The benefits are to be shared by all the poor by virtue of their presence. This entitlement represents a social right for the poor, and their share in the Mitzvah of Tzedakah.

Tzedakah requires more than just philanthropy – willing donors. It also depends on community organization to manage the transfer of resources. In the Torah, parshah Terumah it is written: "Speak to the Children of Israel, that they take Me an offering." The commentators ask: Why does the Torah say "take an offering," and not simply: give money? Aharon Greenberg, in his book Torah Gems/Iturai Torah suggests that this is a reference to the importance of working at fund-raising, not just giving. Valuable causes require human effort at raising the money. Institutions can collapse for want of dedicated workers. The Torah therefore commanded: "let them take" – that people should take on the Mitzvah of Tzedakah by being willing to work to raise money for worthy causes.

So significant is the concept of Tzedakah for our Covenant with God, for our sense of community, for the ethical sustainability of our wider world, that the Rabbis saw in this Mitzvah of Tzedakah the key to our ultimate redemption.

The highly respected Israeli Torah scholar, the last Yeshayahu Leibowitz, pointed out the momentous challenge to the age-old Judaic vision of redemption caused by the establishment of the sovereign State of Israel, what he termed "The Crisis of Religion in the State" in an essay of that title first published in 1952 (reprinted in Judaism, Human Values and the Jewish State, Harvard University Press, 1992). This essay noted that the Torah envisages a messianic kingdom of God, but not the creation of a sovereign Jewish state in an otherwise "unredeemed" world, a world in which humanity – Jewish and non-Jewish – "is still unperfected". Resolution of this crisis depends on actions to perfect, to "redeem" humanity, Jewish and non-Jewish.

This crisis will stay unresolved, and the Torah vision of a reconstituted Israel in a redeemed world will remain imperfect until we embark on the efforts required for the sustainability of our World, by doing Justice, loving Mercy and walking humbly with our God.

Giving A Hand Through JAD

What does all this imply for us, as Canadian Jews? Jews constitute a small minority of Canadians, about 3% of the total population of this country, according to the latest census. And yet Canada's Jewish population has played a disproportionate and preeminent role in national and international efforts to relieve poverty and improve human well-being.

ETHICAL PRECEPTS

To be sure, the horrendous catastrophes that befell many historic Jewish centres in Europe, Asia and Africa in our generation directed most of the organized charitable efforts of Canadian Jewry towards the relief and rehabilitation of Jewish communities in Israel and in other lands of distress. Nevertheless, Canadian Jews remain actively engaged in wider international development assistance efforts through commendable participation in the principal donor agencies, including the Canadian International Development Agency, in non-governmental organizations, as consultants for the design and implementation of aid projects, and in education and research.

However, what was absent for many years was a distinctive Canadian Jewish presence in international development. With the establishment of JAD, the Jewish Association for International Development, Canadian Jewry has taken its place among the organizations engaged in global poverty alleviation and international development. In JAD we have acquired an identifiable expression of our commitment to G'Milut Hassadim, an agency for Tzedakah to achieve human redemption.

JAD is not alone in making a Jewish contribution to international development. Even though Israel is itself a major recipient of foreign aid, mostly from the United States, the Government of Israel has long been an aid donor of modest magnitude to developing countries in Asia, Africa and especially Latin America. This is consistent with the principle of Tzedakah that all are expected to give of themselves to help others. Today, Israel is an upper income developing country, and it is willing to share its experience and its benevolence. In 1992, the mot recent year for which data are available, Israel disbursed some US $27 million in Official Development Assistance to poor countries. Most of this aid supported agriculture, community development, education, and co-operatives.

More recently, the Israel Ministry of Foreign Affairs reported that its technical assistance programs in 1994 covered 143 developing countries, compared to some 80 as recently as 1992. Among Israel's aid recipients were hitherto antagonistic countries such as Egypt, Bangladesh, Guinea, Indonesia, Jordan, Morocco, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, and the Palestinian authority. Israeli aid activities included the provision of more than 3000 scholarships to trainees to attend 113 courses in Israel, with the largest number coming from Egypt; plus the provision of training courses for some 4440 trainees in 50 developing countries. By the mid-1990s Israel has come to rank among the foremost providers of technical training to the developing world.

Now is the time for Canadian Jewry to demonstrate our commitment to the precepts of G'Milut Hassadim, to fulfil the Mitzvah of Tzedakah on a global humanitarian scale, by lending a hand through JAD. United Nations Secretary-General, Boutros Boutros-Ghali pointed out at the World Summit on Social Development in Copenhagen, 1.3 billion of the world's 5.6 billion population still live in appalling destitution. The magnitudes are

by Eugene Kaellis

Most Canadians view reports of racial strife in the United States with mixed feelings – relief that Canada does not face these problems, and anxiety that the same thing could happen here. In fact, we have every kind of racial discrimination in Canada, the most severe directed against Blacks. The treatment of Aboriginal people rivals it but is somewhat tempered by White feelings of guilt.

Although Canada was the terminus of the Underground Railway which transported American slaves to freedom, it had itself been a slave society (both Black and Aboriginal), and through law and social practice discriminated severely against the Black refugees it presumably welcomed. The ongoing systemic discrimination against Blacks in Canada is well documented and, in spite of the Charter of rights and other legal protection, may be worsening. Canada has not experienced Los Angeles type riots or the street warfare of Washington, D.C., but there have been parallel, if still relatively muted, incidents in Toronto and Montreal that reveal a growing discontent and the potential for violence.

Jews Are Most Active In Support Of Blacks

Many Jews, along with other Whites, harbour White supremacist attitudes, but of all the ethnic groups in the USA, Jews have been the most sympathetic to the plight of Blacks and most active in the civil rights movement. Some even became martyrs in the struggle. Yet Black anti-Semitism has become widespread in inner city ghettos of America and among Black university students. Its most extreme form is found in the Nation of Islam led by Louis Farrakhan.

Jews in Canada may be able to avoid a similar situation between themselves and Canadian Blacks by examining the aspects of this relationship that are common to both counties. There are also parallels between the Jewish-Black relationship and the Jewish-Quebecois relationship, which are of particular concern to Canadian Jews.

The alliance between Jewish and Black communities which once formed a major urban power base for the liberal wing of the U.S. Democratic Party has largely been eroded and replaced by the kind of antagonistic bloc voting seen in New York City's last mayoralty election. How did this happen? How was a collaboration based on common goals transformed into fear and rancour on both sides?

How Was Collaboration Transformed Into Fear And Rancour?

Bearing a long legacy of slavery and discrimination, most Blacks remain hopelessly stuck in the lowest rungs of the socio-economic ladder of American society. While a significant but small Black middle class has emerged, the gap between Blacks and Whites is increasing. Black males have the lowest life expectancy of any group in the U.S.; their unemployment rate is more than twice that of White men; Black college graduates are three times more likely to be unemployed than are White graduates; almost one out of three Black families in the U.S. live below the poverty line. School segregation is illegal but in practice it has now reached or exceeded that of the early 'fifties.

The social effects follow. Homicide is the leading cause of death among Black men between the ages of 15 and 44. Between the ages of 15 and 24 they are nine times more likely to kill each other as are Whites. One in four Black men is in jail, on parole, or on probation, about ten times the rate for White men. Though only 12 percent of the American population, Blacks commit more than half the crimes of violence. The rate of venereal disease and drug addiction among Blacks is many times that of Whites.

It must be emphasized that while these data do not reflect the condition of Canadian Blacks they demonstrate what can happen when fulfilment falls far behind expectations.

U.S. White Contempt For Blacks Replaced By Fear

Most White Americans no longer are racist ideologues. Their traditional contempt for Blacks has been replaced by fear. They leave areas inhabited by Blacks, isolate themselves in presumably secure enclaves, acquire weapons, demand law and order, but they do not know how or are unwilling to trade their historically mediated economic and political privileges for social peace and justice.

Blacks, like any people frustrated in achieving their basic aspirations, facing the confusion of a vast, impersonal and apparently impenetrable complex economy, will invariably turn toward surrogate struggles in which success is dependent solely on the exercise of will. The world is replete with movements which, unable to improve material conditions, concentrate on piety, culture, language, nationalism, and claims of racial supremacy.

But why, in their frustration and anger are Blacks expressing so much vehemence directed toward Jews?

Jews Are Traditional Scapegoat

The short answer is that Jews are a traditional and convenient scapegoat. The longer one requires more examination.

The Nation of Islam encourages Black pride. It has achieved considerable credibility through its self-improvement and anti-drug programs. Islam exerts an appeal because it is a universal religion that, at least formally, bars racial discrimination. Much of Africa is Muslim, and while Christianity is still the dominant religion of American Blacks, historically it is associated with slaveowners and colonizers. the anti-Israel stance taken by the Nation of Islam as an expression of solidarity with Palestinians and the Arab world has, by extension and in light of the pro-Israel position of most American Jews, generated a great deal of anti-Semitic feeling.

The traditional anti-Judaism of Christianity, which affects all aspects of North American culture, is another contributing factor.

Most Important Factor Is Economic Competition

However, more important in the current interaction of Jews and Blacks are economic and social factors. Many North American Jews are professionals. Blacks contact them as clients in a relationship usually based on problems or distress and characterized by expense and, often, dissatisfaction. These are bound to create a high level of resentment.

Jews, arriving after much of the North American economy had been staked out by non-Jewish entrepreneurs, and initially having little capital, invested in marginal enterprise such as slum housing, small shops in poor neighbourhoods, and low-investment, labour-intensive industries, e.g., garment manufacturing. Conflict, especially in hard times, was inevitable between Jewish professionals, manufacturers, renters, and retailers and their clients, tenants, workers, and customers.

Jews in urban centers like New York and Los Angeles staked out precincts in civic politics and bureaucracies which also brought them in conflict with members of the underclasses, particularly Blacks. By and large North American Jews still occupy the middle and upper middle positions in society, which makes them competitive with upwardly mobile Blacks.

These and other factors too extensive to list have generated conflict, envy, fear, hatred, and contempt on both sides, which has led to violence, including racial murder.

Similar Situation Exists Between Canadian Blacks And Jews

A somewhat similar situation exists between Jews and Francophones in Quebec, particularly in Montreal. The hostility of some Quebecois toward Jews is based on a type of narrow nationalism which has racist overtones. Francophone Jews whose families have lived in Quebec for generations are still not accepted as "true Quebecois". A history of antagonism toward Jews by the Catholic Church has provided a base for this. As well, many of the economic factors described above, relating to Blacks and Jews in the States, apply to Quebec. The 1990 poverty rate among Quebecois is shocking, about 40% for those 25 to 29 years old and a staggering 85% for single-parent families headed by women. Since these data were collected, the situation can only have gotten worse. Poverty these days, it must be emphasized, is not merely a matter of money, it means a life characterized by constant anxiety over housing and necessities, hopelessness, a loss of dignity and self esteem and a sense that there is little or nothing to lose by violating the values of society.

What can Canadian Jews do to avoid the unwholesome and dangerous developments in the States?

Blaming the victims of circumstances may alleviate guilt. Jews have certainly had a great deal of experience with that phenomenon, usually directed against them by people who declined to help in times of desperation and danger. Now that North American Jews have penetrated into the middle and higher echelons, they can refrain from invidious comparisons between their level of success and the inability of other groups to make comparable headway.

Jews can support social and equity programs to reverse the discrimination and disadvantages that other groups have suffered. they can make efforts at establishing closer ties with members of other communities and, without patronizing them, offer their support in the struggle for freedom and equality. And they can seek personal ties with members of other cultural and racial communities.

Personal Ties Surest Way To Combat Cultural Stereotypes

This is the surest way to undermine cultural and racial stereotypes. Most of the information White Canadians have about Canadian Blacks, for example, is derived from the media. Imagine someone whose only source of information about Montreal came from foreign newspapers. His perception would be shaped by reports of the massacre of women at the University of Montreal, the FLQ bombings, gangland murders, drug busts and similar headlined stories. Survey after survey show that those sections of the country with the most anti-immigrant sentiments have the lowest percentage of immigrants. Contrary to the old saw, familiarity breeds acceptance, by Jews and of Jews.

And most important, while Jews have an absolute obligation to protect themselves against racist attacks no matter what their source, if they respond to racism with racism they will only contribute to a vicious and escalating spiral.

Jews And Employment Equity – An Unholy Alliance

by Stephen Stern

There is a disconcerting tendency in the Jewish media to denigrate or distort the views of political conservatives. Writers or politicians of the right who dare question the regnant politically correct sentiments on such issues as employment equity, pay equity, radical feminism, government funding for private schools, or reducing Canada's bloated welfare system, are invidiously dismissed as cranks, racists, or bigots. Despite the obvious fact that many conservative commentators are themselves Jews, many prominent Jewish intellectuals even claim to detect the sickly scent of anti-Semitism in their writings. Such ad hominem attacks merely display an unbecoming hauteur from those on the left.

It is clear, nevertheless, that these conservative positions are becoming increasingly accepted by the influential North American intelligentsia and policy makers, and thus bear closer and fairer scrutiny. One such issue is that of employment equity.

Pros And Cons Of Affirmative Action

Employment equity (more familiarly known as Affirmative Action in the United States) is one of the most controversial and potentially the most socially divisive of recent government initiatives. Simply stated, the essence of this doctrine is that, in order to correct past prejudices and injustices committed almost invariably by white (Christian) males against women, blacks, or natives, governments must intervene and compel the workplace to adopt hiring practices which reflect society at large. To this end, such places as police departments, offices, factories, university faculties, and retail stores must set euphemistically named "targets" so that the percentage of black men, aboriginals, and women of colour inter alia in these areas of employment approximates that in the general population. To some, at first glance, this notion may appear to be highly attractive – perhaps especially to Jews who pride themselves as historical defenders of the weak and oppressed. Furthermore, those who favour such measures attempt to assure the skeptical among us that these policies do not involve quotas, are not in themselves racist, and do not violate the cherished principle of hiring on the basis of merit only.

Some preliminary observations are needed here. One of the fundamental premises and pivotal justifications for such programs as employment equity is the notion that the lack of proportional representation of blacks or women for example in one job category or another is proof positive of systemic racism or sexism in Canadian society. Stuff and nonsense. This idea, although doggedly held by otherwise intellectually astute observers, is logically and empirically untenable. It should be obvious that the absence of Asians on the Toronto Blue Jays team does not demonstrate systemic anti-Asian discrimination in major league baseball. Similarly, as comedian Jackie Mason has satirically pointed out in his Broadway show, the fact that there are few Jewish welders does not prove, as some would have it, that the welders' union is anti-Semitic! The highly disproportionate number of Jewish violinists does not indicate, for example, that symphony orchestras discriminate against Moslems or aboriginal women or anyone else. Clearly, the lack of strict proportional representation in this or that job description does not prove racism. It may demonstrate merely innocent cultural preferences which ought to be celebrated by all of us including those vocal proponents of ethnic diversity.

Despite Denials Affirmative Action Means Quotas

Secondly, we should note that Webster's Third New International Dictionary defines quota as a "fixed number or percentage of minority group members who may be admitted into some activity or institution". So let us ask the supporters of employment equity to be frank and admit that, regardless of the use of such politically correct code words as minority preferences, target groups, or preferential set asides, what we have here is nothing less than good old fashioned discrimination and quotas. Furthermore, we must vigorously acknowledge that policies that declare that people ought to be hired or promoted – or denied the same – primarily on the basis of their skin colour (or ethnic background or sex) are ipso facto racist. Thus, although the champions of employment equity pay obligatory lipservice to the principle of hiring on the basis of merit only, we must not lose sight of the unavoidable but nasty fact that what we are dealing with here are those ugliest of words and deeds – racism and quotas.

Many of those advocating these policies, of course, will refuse to recognize these truths, but the extraordinary thing is that there is a small number of employment equity advocates (some of whom are Jews with the highest intellectual credentials) who do have the integrity to admit that this program is indeed fundamentally racist and sexist in as much as it clearly discriminates against white males. However, they declare with staggering chutzpah that because some instances of past social injustice have been so heinous (such as three centuries of black slavery or mistreatment of native peoples) small doses of quotas or "reverse discrimination" may be unpalatable but are necessary.

Despite Past Discrimination Jews Have Never Asked For Quotas

This is astonishing. One would expect that Jews, of all people, would thunderously denounce such policies to the heavens. If any minority can claim a history of unrelenting persecution, it is doubtless the Jews. It is distressing that one must restate the obvious fact that the Holocaust ranks with any past injustice claimed by any minority at any time. Yet, the remarkable fact is that the Jews have never proposed or favoured legislation forcing employers to preferentially hire them in order to make amends for over two thousand years of past suffering. Indeed, they have fought tirelessly for the removal of all quotas and all references to one's skin colour or ethnic heritage in matters pertaining to hiring, firing, or promotion. They have, to their eternal credit, simply demanded that merit be the only criterion.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

That certain Jews have abandoned this honourable position in regard to the employment of blacks and aboriginals amongst others, smacks of an entirely repulsive condescension.

But there are other problems with the very concept of employment equity, not the least of which is the fact that it flies in the face of the remarkable legal, political, and socio-economic institutions evolved, over two and a half thousand years, by Western civilization from its Greco-Roman and Judaeo-Christian roots. Especially since the Renaissance and the Enlightenment, the Western world has increasingly recognized, protected, and cherished the primacy of the sacred individual. The present tendency, as exemplified in employment equity legislation, is an unfortunate reversion to the medieval notion of viewing people, not as individuals with equal legal rights, but as members of one group or another with varying degrees of rights and privileges depending on their status as politically correct victims.

Difference Between Civil Rights And Human Rights

Some on the left have recognized this atavistic thrust and have attempted to avoid the issue by differentiating between civil rights (by which every Canadian is accorded equal rights) and human rights (by which every Canadian is accorded different rights and privileges based on their group membership)! Such arguments are disturbing because, to be blunt, they are intellectually jejune and mendacious. They display an unforgivable disdain for the magnificent achievement of the English common law in particular and the Western political tradition in general by replacing the antiquated concept of group rights with the modern one of individual rights.

As has been noted by others, there are unintended consequences to employment equity. The first is that the proposed beneficiaries have a perpetual cloud over their heads. Others will always be asking if the woman or native for example really received the promotion or new position in question simply because of their sex or colour or because they truly deserved it. This is unfair to all concerned, but it is an intrinsic part of this legislation. The second unintended result is the transformation of Canadian society into a monstrous mirror image of South African apartheid. Indeed, if this seems like an unwarranted exaggeration, it should be noted that as this essay is being written, there are calls from a university in Ontario to provide a separate recreational lounge for non-white students. They deny this is racist, of course, because historical victims of racism (non-whites) cannot by definition be racist!

This Program Will Rend The Fabric Of Society

It is no hyperbole to state that employment equity is so fundamentally at odds with the justly celebrated assumptions of Western civilization that if this and related programs are not jettisoned, they will rend the very fabric of our society. It is lamentably ironic and, indeed even tragically Kafkaesque, that many Jewish intellectuals are in the vanguard of those who, through either ideological perversity or invincible ignorance, promote this policy of unmitigated racism.

The Israel-Diaspora Identity Crisis

by Jacob Chinitz

It was good to see the current Jewish situation summarized in a neat, good looking pamphlet which I read in one sitting, after receiving it in Jerusalem as part of what I assume was an international mailing to rabbis. While I admit that many important points about diaspora, Israel, education, intermarriage, assimilation, extremism were made, I submit that the author contradicts himself, and refuses to accept the logic of his own argument, in not coming to the conclusion: The diaspora does not help Israel, it itself is the cause of its own problems as well as the problems of Israel. Therefore its disappearance or limitation to the "Orthodox ghettos" the author speaks about, would not be a tragedy, as he sees it, but, on the contrary would give a boost to that very Israel which the author himself concedes, with enthusiasm, is the center, the hope of Jewish survival.

One example of contradiction is this: In one place he says that sending diaspora children to Israel for a six week tour would be wasted money. In another place he quote Steinzaltz to the effect that any visit to Israel may yield results.

Another example is this: In one place he claims that day school education works against intermarriage. In another place he admits that a large percentage of day school graduates, lacking family background, also yield to intermarriage.

Anti-Semitism Has Not Disappeared

Another contradiction is not between one place and another place in the pamphlet but between what the pamphlet says and reality. In several places the author stresses that anti-Semitism has practically disappeared. the truth is that it is spreading in Russia, Germany and in the United States. More incidents of physical attacks on Jewish persons and Jewish property are reported every year. More skinheads and neo-Nazis appear every year. More black Jew haters and Moslem fundamentalists appear in the United States every year. I do not argue that therefore Jewish money should be spent for ADL or JDL or AJC. I argue that if Mr. Leibler sees the abatement of Jew hatred as an asset to the diaspora, he should not count his chickens too early. If, on the other hand, he laments the lack of anti-Semitism as removing a force for Jewish unity and survival, he can be consoled by the sad facts.

But the main contradiction is between the thrust of his thesis, namely that Israel is the bearer of Jewish existence in the present and hope for the future – and his insistence on worrying about the disappearance of the diaspora. He even tries to justify this contradiction by claiming that the diaspora is needed for Israel itself. Which reminds me of the argument made by diasporists and professional Israeli shelichim who spend time in the diaspora. It goes like this: American Jews must stay in America in order to help Israel financially, politically and morally. Not only must they stay where they are, but Israelis must come to America to strengthen the American diaspora, so that it may be of more help to Israel.

I do not claim that the four hundred thousand Israelis who live in the United States made exactly that argument, but they could have, with justification.

Has the Diaspora Been Of More Help Or More Harm To Israel?

Have we ever considered the proposition that the diaspora, including the American diaspora, has not been of more help than harm to Israel, but that it has been of more harm than help, to Israel? Here are some points to ponder:

1. The argument has been made that without the United Nations Israel would not have been born. Perhaps the only reason Israel needed the Partition Resolution was the fact that there was a United Nations in existence. Without it, and as it turned out even with it, Israel would have created itself by fighting for itself. Similarly, without the American Jews, it has been argued, Israel could not be created. But perhaps the financial and political support from American Jews were necessary because the existence of the American Jewish community offered other alternatives.
2. The diaspora, and the fact that Jews had lived in it for two thousand years, provided the Arabs and other anti-Zionists, including Jewish ones, with the argument that the Jews were not a nation but a religion and therefore had no right to Palestine or any other territory on earth.
3. If the alternative of freedom and equality in America were not available, the controversy within Judaism about the correctness of Zionism would not have been as severe as it was.
4. If the prosperous American Jewish community were not there as a magnet drawing Israelis into the diaspora, perhaps many or most of them would have stayed, and thus more than compensated for the loss of sixty thousand Olim from the United States, and almost for the half million Olim from Russia.

Is The Idea Of A Jewish State Plausible If Most Jews Remain Outside?

5. With two thirds of the Jewish people living in the diaspora and only one third in Israel, what plausibility does the idea of a Jewish state have in the world? What are Israeli children supposed to believe about the justification for, or even the definition of, the Jewish state if most of the Jews live outside of the Jewish state? We will see what plausibility there will be provided for the notion of a Palestinian state if most of the Palestinians remain in America, Europe or Arabia.
6. Without the diaspora, the pride, or the shame, of the Wandering Jew will disappear, and the idea of Jews living in the Jewish country will take on more logic, more ethics, more naturalness. After the diaspora disappears, the George Steiners, the Arthur Koestlers, the Nahum Goldmanns will not be able to flaunt their sophisticated theories about the superiority of the diaspora, sophisticated, cultured, Jewish citizen of the world.
7. Without the diaspora, perhaps Israeli Jewish children will not consider Jewish religion as a product of exile and Jewish homelessness and abnormalcy. I do not deny the repulsion which is produced by Haredism, but in every country in the world, despite the prevalent secularism, religion does exist. Perhaps Jewish religion would exist in the Jewish state as well if it were freed of the taint of wandering and acceptance of exile as punishment, by the pious, or as a great opportunity for Tikun Olam by the liberals.
8. If the diaspora did not exist, Jewish wealth would be invested in the Jewish state, in the Tel Aviv stock exchange instead of in Wall Street.
9. If the diaspora did not exist, Israel would not have to expend funds to send Shelichim to save the diaspora communities.

The Importance of Diversity

by Hugh Segal

The following article consists of excerpts from the Lou Harris Memorial Lecture delivered recently to the Holy Blossom Temple in Toronto.

Having worked as the hired help for a Conservative Premier of Ontario and a Conservative Prime Minister of Canada, and having been a candidate for Parliament myself over twenty years ago, and having had a Liberal father and NDP grandfather, the notion of diversity is not something particularly new to me. In the days when I was a young Conservative or member of the provincial Union Nationale in Quebec, many in the Jewish community did not know quite what to make of my activities. Knocking on doors in the largely Jewish riding of Montreal – D'Arcy Mcgee, for the candidate of the nationalist Union Nationale provincial party, running against a Liberal by the name of Victor Goldbloom, whose father had been the physician who had seen, along with my mother, to my own birth – well if this was not hearsay, it was surely outside the framework of understandable practice.

Was this young extremist just being contrary? Why could he not simply join up, at the appropriate time and place, with the "L" and "I" Jewish liberal establishment and be done with it? Surely that was required and accepted.

I would like to share with you why that level of conformity would not have been suitable and why, both from the point of view of the march of time and from the point of view of the emergent realities in Israel and here, a more diverse stance, a more diffuse range of philosophical options and instruments will be necessary. We must advance the conditions of freedom and opportunity within which we can survive and sustain our rights and obligations as citizens; we must also sustain the permanence and presence of the State of Israel as a haven for those for whom, for reasons of choice or circumstance Israel remains the only answer.

The old right/left typification of the Israel-Arab dilemma has gone the way of the dodo bird, and we are back to the reality of managing the ethnic, religious, territorial and political realities of the region – without any refuge behind the proxy wall of a now ended global philosophical dispute.

The very pluralism that typifies the internal debates in Israel within the context of their determined and broad democracy, speaks most hopefully to the ultimate choices Israelis will make about their own future, in their own way. Those who live there will have to decide between themselves and the various options on the road to a lasting peaceful agreement with their Arab neighbours, on terms that reflect their own complex pluralism. Those who cheer peace and wish Israel well from afar, with prayers, good wishes and material philanthropic support, would do well to replace the urge to offer advice with the preparedness to help in whatever peace Israelis themselves can come to embrace.

Importance of Political Pluralism for Jews

As someone who has been outside the Liberal mainstream of the Jewish community, I have often asked myself whether it has ever mattered to Jews in terms of our schools, our organizations, our religious freedom what political activity if any is pursued by community membership or leadership.

On balance, I would have to say that the only point of departure that is absolutely unconstructive is that of being, in timidity and supplication within the scope of only one political party.

I remember when, in Quebec, in 1966 the popular Liberal, Jean Lesage was defeated by the Union Nationale's Daniel Johnson, without any meaningful voter support from the anglophone or Jewish or Italian parts of the electorate.

Despite that, the Union Nationale went on to provide full funding for confessional Jewish schools in Quebec, advancing the premise that the right to attend publicly funded confessional schools should not and could not be limited only to Catholics and Protestants.

It was a pluralism that spoke eloquently not to the absence of antisemitism in Quebec, for it is no more absent or present in Quebec than it is anywhere else, but to the ability of tolerance, and cultural diversity to co-exist comfortably with Quebec nationalism.

A nationalism that sought to reach out to the pluralism, that could and would embrace someone else's religious and cultural difference struck me then as it does now as fundamentally more constructive than a liberalism which takes people either for granted or assumes that they are spoken for. Actually, I am troubled by any one group or party or organization purporting to have an historic right to speak for me in any consistent or inherited fashion. The issue is not the role of the Canadian Jewish Congress, or the World Zionist Organization, or B'nai Brith or the others. They all have the right to discharge their mandates as broadly and intensely as they choose. They are forces for good, even when they do not agree with each other. In fact the diversity of the community, its reach, its scope, its range, depth and rootedness in this country, our traditions, professions, pursuits and conventions are all immeasurably strengthened and deepened when diversity wins out over being unduly coalesced and too easily "spoken for".

It does not matter where one stands on the age old debate over religion vs. people vs. faith community vs. ethnic or cultural group. What matters is that the community speaks with the fullness of its diversity and the broadest of agendas – both collective, group and individual.

Diversity in our politics and our representation is as important as it is unavoidable. Forced uniformity or contrived uniformity has the added burden these days of being hard to believe and even harder to maintain, especially when looking ahead.

Just a very few months ago, we saw Muslims from Bosnia welcomed as refugees into the state of Israel, just as they had welcomed boatpeople a decade or so ago.

Our Immigration Policy Under Pressure

France, Germany, the UK, Holland, our American friends, Austria are all on the front lines; our own immigration policy is clearly under pressure from the more right wing conservative forces in the land, fuelled in large measure by economic anxiety, but not without some strains of xenophobia. Xenophobia is never ever sated with simply heading off the "Outsiders"; always, always, it becomes focused on a search for "outsiders within".

"COMMITTEE MEETING" BY DAVID FEIST, MONTREAL

The world does not have enough policemen or border guards to stem this tide – the only rational approach is a humane policy based on a real and genuine sharing of the economic bounty we have in a fashion that could see the rapid growth of our own domestic market to fifty million Canadians.

We must accept as well, that with even a hint of normalization between the participants in the middle east, and with a continued de-escalation of major power direct involvement, Israel will be treated by Foreign Ministries around the world with more casual disregard than has heretofore been the case. Certainly, my experience in Ottawa, led me to conclude that were it not for a strong willed Prime Minister who had his own very definite views on the matter, the traditional Arabist line of External Affairs, would have prevailed. This is, after all, a department that was quite comfortable with a Canadian Foreign Minister in the late seventies visiting most countries in the mideast region, except for Israel, and a department that quietly encouraged Arab nations to protest Mr. Clark's ill-fated attempt to move the Canadian Embassy to Jerusalem during his short period in office as Prime Minister. While the present undersecretary is a delightful exception to the rule, the operative culture of the department is one of, at best disengagement and at worst a modest tilt towards the Arab or Palestinian side in any debate. In diverse and broad ways, it is important that the community register its presence quickly, not only with the new administration, but with all parties in the house, to ensure no misunderstanding of either positive interest or resolve. While prospects for peace are encouraging and compelling, total disengagement by the west, especially by middle powers, such as Canada would be truly premature and unhelpful.

Integration and Identity Not Assimilation or Isolation

The evolution of Canadian history, not only in politics, but in the professions, arts, culture, commerce and education, has benefited greatly by our community's individual and collective achievements. We have role models throughout society of individuals who have managed both, integration and identity, without either assimilation or isolation.

And while the established presence is perhaps, not as brash as the Dershowitz model in the United States, and while Canadian cultural realities have a less pervasive central presence than is the case to our south, none of us need be troubled by the permanence of the Jewish contribution, providing, of course, that we do not take it or the rights and responsibilities that make that contribution possible for granted. The best way to ensure that there is no threat is to be constantly prepared for one. The way to ensure that bigotry and racism do not advance, is by responding quickly and massively to any of its elements, having the courage to speak clearly, and the wisdom to respond to the real thing when it is clearly discernible.

Diversity is Strength

My generation is remarkably fortunate to have missed both the terror of war and the ravages of the great depression. The responsibility we have even at mid-life to come to the aid of those Canadians under fire because of the burdens of poverty and disadvantage remain great. The responsibilities that come with what Abba Eban has referred to as the mystery of resonance – the larger voice and impact of a community so relatively small are also great. The diversity of our community is a strength in discharging that responsibility. Resonance is earned and not inherited. Each generation must find its own path to its sustenance and the benefits that come therefrom. Reaching out to those less fortunate, remains in as compelling a sense as any, one of the best ways to earn the resonance that is part of the reality and substance of Jewish survival and continuity. Bloodlines without values, process without substance, convention without purpose, these are the underpinnings of sand on which little can be built.

Risk of Reaching Out Less Than Risk of Isolation

The miracle of intergenerational survival is tied to the realities of a will to reach out beyond the narrow and the unduly orthodox. The risks in the diaspora of a Judaism that is integrated and diversified, reaching out and embracing diverse political and cultural realities are far less than the risks of an isolationism or conformity that seduces with simplicity and pretends that a complex world is easily addressed with answers that are written down by others and remove from all of us the need to reason, differentiate and choose.

Modern Canadian Experience is to be Comfortable with Choice

To be part of the modern Canadian Jewish experience, is to be comfortable with the reality of choice, and the sure and present knowledge that someone in some position of authority will always have wished you had chosen differently. In public life and in private affairs, we are known by the choices we have made, and judged accordingly. Having the courage to choose, without forgetting the rich heritage of counsel and tradition that enables more informed choice, on issues humanitarian, pecuniary and beyond is the essence of today's Diaspora imperative. Integration, reaching out, being part of the whole, choosing the human side of most debates, has never offended my own conservatism and always reflected my faith and beliefs. The only mistake, the mistake most likely to diminish the resonance and import the community has earned throughout the western world, is failing to see the necessity of choosing. The mistake is believing that whatever the levels of integration, however open the society and the way of life, any humanitarian issue does not concern us. In the end, either through the politics of omission or commission, it always does.

As a student, the Ethics of Our Fathers was always a linchpin for relatively short and painless signposts to the broader ethical Jewish experience. One has always stayed with me:

"If I do not provide for myself, than who shall? If I am only for myself, then what value is that? And if now is not the time to begin, then, pray tell, when is the time?"

A simple argument for diversity, for reaching out, for playing a part, for doing it early and for sustaining the humanitarian imperative at one's core – that is my case.

ISRAEL-DIASPORA

10. If the diaspora did not exist, Israel would not be considered, as it still is, as only one alternative for Jewish existence, as a haven for refugees, as a compensation for the Holocaust, as an instrument of world Jewry for domination of the Middle East. Israel would be accepted as Switzerland and Belgium are accepted. No one would argue that it is dangerous to concentrate all Jews in one place because they could be destroyed in one place. We never heard such arguments from the Swiss or the Belgians.

Reaching Teenagers

A major problem remains – that of reaching teenagers who have had their Bar/Bat Mitzvah, given the fact the very few continue to attend Day School into the High School years. To answer this would require a separate article. I can however point to one program that managed to attract teenagers and even adults on a continuing basis. I refer to my own synagogue, Shaar Hashomayim in Montreal, who has been running a Home Study program for the past 35 years. The basic idea is that a group of 8 to 10 couples meet at each others' homes every two weeks to study a particular aspect of Judaism that interests them. The Synagogue subsidizes a teacher's salary, but has no other financial involvement. Membership in the group is by invitation only, thus assuring social compatibility. I can vouch for the fact that this formula has been successful, since I attended such a group for 33 years, and Shaar Hashomayim last year had nine groups functioning.

This is only one idea. I am certain that we have enough educational expertise in our community to devise other plans. The 'sine qua non' is approval of the basic concept, and enough financial community support to engage a full-time educator to disseminate the concept across Canada, and provide supervision once it is established.

POETRY

Houdini

Outside my window the Maple daily yields yellow leaves gasping from gallowed stems, pendant cloth stars stitched in light of the long ago dead.

Knotted roots clamber nightly like arms through frozen soil, snow-laced soil that straightjackets the foundation of my house.
I dream myself Houdini, struggle, contort,
disjoint my supple Jewish frame in all directions:
He was the genius of the century.
Had he lived to see Auschwitz, Treblinka, Majdanek would his lungs have breathed the Zyklon B as if it were the purest Laurentian air?
Would the bullets of the Einsatzgruppen have passed through him like a spirit?
Would he have metamorphosed from flesh through the crematorium smokestack and back to flesh again?
Would their doctors have experimented on him with poisons and diabolical instruments to disclose the secrets of his death-defying talent?

In the morning I am buried under folds and folds of sheets like the packaged vaudeville Jew whose artifice could not save him from even a single blow like a quota administered at McGill
underhandedly.

numbing; yet, the horrific effects of extreme poverty and deprivation can be overcome, with available knowledge and resources, as the experience in international development demonstrates.

Tikkun Olam On A Global Scale

As we say in the Alaiynu prayer at the close of every daily service: "We therefore hope (that)... the world will be perfected ("le-takain olam") under the kingdom of the Almighty..." It is through support for international development that this expressed hope can be translated into actions for "tikkun olam", perfecting the world. This globalization of G'Milut Hassadim and Tzedakah derives its visionary impact for all humanity from the prophecy of Micah:

> "In the days to come, the Mount of the Lord's house shall stand firm above the mountains... And the many nations shall go and say: Come, Let us go up to the Mount of the Lord, to the House of the God of Jacob; that He may instruct us in His ways, and that we may walk in his paths. For instruction shall come forth from Zion, the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. Thus He will judge among the many peoples, and arbitrate for the multitude of nations, however distant; And they shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation shall not take up sword against nation; they shall not again know war; But every man shall sit under his grapevine or fig tree and no one will make him afraid" (Micah, 4:1-4).

That is the global meaning of redemption.

Palestine/Jordan inevitable

Husseini predicts confederation

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The Oslo peace process will lead to a Palestinian state by the year 2000 when Israel's final status talks with the PLO will supposedly be finished, a high-ranking Palestinian official has predicted.

"For sure, we will have a Palestinian state, with security arrangements here and there," said Faisal Husseini – a minister in the Palestine National Authority – in an interview.

Looking further ahead, Husseini said that a confederation between a sovereign Palestine and Jordan is inevitable. "There is no place for small states today. There is a need for regional cooperation. We, the Palestinians, Israelis and Jordanians, can build a new atmosphere in the area."

Husseini also said the capital of the state will be East Jerusalem. Husseini visited Canada at the invitation of the Canadian government, and arrived here about a week after Israel and the PLO formally signed the Oslo 2 pact in Washington.

Husseini's statements run counter to Israeli policy. Israel annexed East Jerusalem in 1967 and considers it an integral part of its capital and non-negotiable. Israel also opposes the creation of a Palestinian state.

Husseini, who stopped in Ontario to meet with Palestinian Canadians and a Canadian Friends of Peace Now delegation, called for free access between the two halves of Jerusalem in the future. "We don't want walls," said Husseini, the minister in charge of Jerusalem affairs.

Voter intimidation

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Out-of-province referendum voters should not be scared off by a new requirement to specify when they'll return to Quebec, say organizations which have been working hard to get their vote out.

"It is our view that since the date of return is not verifiable, it should not dissuade people from exercising their right to vote," said Jack Jedwab, executive director for Canadian Jewish Congress, Quebec region (CJC-Q).

Jedwab was referring to a recent announcement by Pierre-F. Cote, Quebec's chief electoral officer that out-of province voters will now have to indicate their date of return to Quebec instead of just declaring a general intention to return.

Letter to a Separatist

By BOB RAE
Special to the CJN

TORONTO — Before you vote Yes to breaking up our country, I ask you to think of those things we have in common. First there is the land we share. Imagine for a moment the first trip up the Saguenay by Europeans, the first view of Lake Ontario, Superior, Niagara. Go north from the cities huddled along the rivers and lakes near the American border. See the Canada we share: in the preamble to your Act of Separation you talk of "winter" as if this belongs only to you. Not so: we are your partners in weather as well as geography. The landscape that inspires you inspires us as well. It is the same.

Referendum Quebec

We are not conquerors. There are none among us now. The battle for domination in North America between two European empires is over. Behind us. You and I were. There is a history to be learned and respected. There is also a mythology from which we must awaken.

Lord Durham, a foreign Imperialist, thought he could force assimilation. He never lived here, and his failure was obvious almost as soon as his report was written. Every successful government in Canada since the 1840s, since Lafontaine and Baldwin, has built on the natural partnership between the peoples that share the land, between English and French.

The year 1867 was another step in the tradition. Quebec achieved an important degree of sovereignty, as did Ontario and the other provinces. We do not live in a unitary state. We live in a federal country in which sovereignty is sometimes shared, sometimes unique to a member of the federation. The French language, which has survived this long in North America, is better protected today within Quebec and Canada than ever before. Its growth and survival is not a matter for walls.

Support for Goldmans

TORONTO — Rabbi Philip Scheim of Beth David B'nai Israel Beth Am Congregation here has offered to forward letters of support to the family of the late Ronald Goldman, following the recent acquittal of O.J. Simpson for the murders of Goldman and Simpson's ex-wife, Nicole Brown Simpson.

Rabbi Scheim has arranged to forward mail through a colleague in California, with whom he is in contact via the Internet.

Letters may be sent in care of Rabbi Scheim, Beth David B'nai Israel Beth Am Congregation, 55 Yeomans Rd., Downsview, Ont. M3H 3J7.

CJC Supports Muslims

TORONTO — Canadian Jewish Congress, Ontario region (CJC) has come to the support of Sunni Muslims in their fight for a mosque in East York.

The Metro municipality recently rejected plans for a mosque, citing insufficient parking.

In a letter to East York Mayor Michael Prue, Ellen Cole, chair of the region's community relations committee, said CJC was "disheartened" by the decision, which "leaves [the] council open to allegations of discrimination."

Cole called on the council to show "flexibility" on the issue.

Super Sunday Soon

VICTORIA — The Combined Jewish Appeal campaign here gets under way with a Super Sunday telethon Oct. 29.

Campaign chair Chuck Waldman says he's confident that last year's total of $60,000 will be exceeded.

Waldman says he's been promised that United Israel Appeal will make provisions for scholarships for deserving Vancouver Island teens to participate in the Israel Experience program.

CJA Pledges Up

WINNIPEG — Combined Jewish Appeal here reports a four per cent increase in pledges over last year, according to its recent Super Sunday results.

There were almost 2,000 pledges, including 140 new gifts, reports campaign director Gerry Koffman.

The drive so far has raised $750,000 toward its $3.3 million target.

Correction

VANCOUVER — The Vancouver chapter of the Canadian Friends of Hebrew University is sponsoring a performance of Show Boat on Dec. 7 at the Ford Centre for the Performing Arts. Incorrect information appeared in an Oct. 5 CJN brief.

ISRAEL

Aliyah Up Nine Per Cent

JERUSALEM — Some 82,000 new immigrants, including 68,000 from the former Soviet Union, immigrated to Israel in the year just ended, the Jewish Agency announced last week.

The number is a nine per cent increase in aliyah over the previous Jewish year.

Christians Gather

JERUSALEM — Over 5,000 Christian supporters of Israel gathered here last week for the opening of the International Christian Embassy's annual Feast of Tabernacles Assembly, where they heard an address by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

The event, which the Tourism Ministry calls the largest single annual event in Israel's tourist calendar, included participants from 90 countries, including over 100 from Papua-New Guinea.

WORLD

Jews Remembered

SPLIT, Croatia — Seven Jewish victims of the war in Bosnia were memorialized here last week in a ceremony and tombstone unveiling at the Jewish cemetery.

The seven died near here after fleeing Bosnia.

About 50 people attended the unveiling, including members of the Split Jewish community and Bosnian refugees.

Lileikis Extradition

VILNIUS — Lithuania announced last week that it will not seek the extradition of Aleksandras Lileikis to stand trial for alleged war crimes.

Lileikis, 88, of Norwood, Mass., is accused of taking part in the sending of as many as 40,000 Lithuanian Jews to Nazi death camps.

The U.S. Department of Justice filed suit last September to have his American citizenship revoked. The Lithuanian government said in a cable filed in U.S. District Court this month that even though an extradition treaty between the United States and Lithuania signed in 1924 is in force, it is not "legally effective" in the Lileikis case.

The decision "makes it improbable" that Lileikis will ever face extradition, said Nathan Lewin, president of the International Association of Jewish Lawyers and Jurists.

Community urged to protest Ontario cutbacks

'There must be some caring that infuses our civil life'

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The Jewish community is being asked to participate in an ongoing vigil outside Queen's Park to protest Ontario government cutbacks.

The daily vigils are scheduled to begin in early November after two protest events organized by Witness for Social Justice and Compassion (WSJC), an ad hoc coalition of faith groups.

The first event — a march and news conference — was held last week as "a clarion call to all faith groups," said Matthew Behrens, a spokesperson for WSJC. It is designed to confront the members of the Progressive Conservative government with a moral call to act justly on behalf of the poor and those in need, Behrens said.

Behrens said that short of bringing down the Tories, the group wants to compel "the government to show respect for the people [and] make delinquent corporations pay their fair share of taxes.

"The basic message is to say 'No' to the violence the [government] is doing to one million people, the violence of poverty, of taking oxygen from people in their homes (a health care cut), of [reducing] day care."

Speaking prior to the rally, Rabbi Wayne Allen, president of the Toronto Board of Rabbis (TBR), said he hoped to send a moral message to the government of Premier Mike Harris. "Hopefully [we will] change the mind of the Harris government, to ensure that those on the brink of poverty and ruin are given the means to sustain themselves."

Rabbi Wayne Allen

Rabbi Allen, who stressed he was participating as an individual and not as a representative of the TBR or the Beth Tikvah Synagogue where he is spiritual leader, said he believed that "to balance the budget on the backs of those who can least afford it is not fair, is not just and is not Jewish."

Those who participated in the rally "believed there must be some caring that infuses our civil life as well as our religious life," he said.

Speaking prior to the rally, Behrens said he expected the participation of representatives from about 20 faith communities: the United Church, the Roman Catholic Church, Quakers, Pantheists, Buddhists, Anglicans, Mennonites, as well as lay people and social activists.

He said WSJC has in the past been involved in "social justice issues, anti-poverty work and advocating prison abolition."

He discounted suggestions that public opinion polls show widespread support for the budgetary cutbacks announced by the Harris government. If people knew that the cutbacks were being implemented while numerous corporations owed billions in unpaid taxes, that support would evaporate, he asserted.

Polls don't reflect on the moral message that it's wrong to deprive people of the necessities of life. "People wouldn't want the extra $500 (from reduced taxes) if it comes at the expense of taking people's food out of their mouths," he added.

Behrens said the next event planned by WSJC is a pre-Remembrance Day gathering on Nov. 9, titled Will they be forgotten? It will be a vigil at Queen's Park for the "victims of the war against the poor."

Prisoners of war are treated better than the poor are in Ontario, he said. At least they get food, water and shelter as of right. In Ontario, these necessities are now considered privileges, he said.

Daily vigils at Queen's Park will begin following the Nov. 9 rally and members of faith communities are invited to participate. He suggested that synagogues might encourage their members to take part in the vigil on a once-a-week basis.

Survivors honored at feminist Sukkot

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Toronto's fourth annual Succah-by-the-Water, held last week in Harbourfront's large blue and white striped tent, may be this city's last one.

The future of the hugely successful feminist Sukkot celebration, which has inspired similar events in 32 cities in the United States and Israel, depends on finding new volunteers to coordinate the project, said Nora Gold, vice-president of the New Israel Fund of Canada (NIFC), under whose auspices the celebration is held.

Current volunteer organizers, who have worked on Succah since its inception, have decided to pass on the torch, she said.

Over the past four years, the event has raised over $100,000 to support women's projects in Israel, such as rape crisis shelters, which receive NIF grants.

Michele Landsberg, Toronto Star columnist and a driving force behind Succah, invited Holocaust survivors being honored at the event 50 years after liberation to stand for the Shechinah blessing by Rabbi Nancy Wechsler.

Survivor Judith Rubinstein, accompanied by her daughter Rochelle Rubinstein Kaplan and granddaughter Aleesha Rubinstein Kaplan, paid tribute to the memory of five heroic young women who were prisoners with her at Auschwitz.

On the second day of Sukkot in 1944, four of them blew up Crematorium Number 4 with smuggled gunpowder. Alla Gartner, Rosa Robota, Regina Sapirstein and Esther Wajcblum were hung in front of their fellow prisoners.

"We were inspired by their heroism," said Rubinstein, who witnessed the crematorium's destruction. "The unfortunate people brought to Auschwitz to be killed were shipped back to Germany, and some of them survived because of the bravery of the four girls."

Rubinstein also spoke of Mala Zimetbaum, the 19-year-old chief translator of the camp, who saved lives by omitting names from selection lists. After escaping from Auschwitz, she was captured and sentenced to hang, but committed suicide by slashing her wrists in front of the crowd forced to witness her murder.

"You are dying too," she cried boldly to a Nazi guard after punching him in the face. "Soon you will be paying for your crimes."

Fela Karmiol of The Terrace Holocaust Survivors' Group read a commemorative poem written by a fellow group member.

Hopes, Dreams for the Future

Adele Reinhartz spoke of her mother's Holocaust experience, including the unexpected granting of extra food portions by a concentration camp kapo (prisoner/guard) who admired the bravery of Reinhartz' aunt. While waiting in line for food, the aunt, in a risky act of defiance, had slapped the kapo in the face.

Although much tribute was paid to the past, the celebration was very much focused on the future.

Rabbi Elyse Goldstein expressed her vision of a future in which "a woman's perspective will be considered absolutely necessary," just as all its component species are considered necessary for a lulav to be kosher.

Special guest Galia Golan, a leading feminist and peace activist in Israel, said most of all, she hoped for peace and freedom from the values engendered by a society at war. Golan was honored in Washington, D.C., last Thursday with the NIF's second annual Alice Shalvi Israel Women's Leadership Award.

With the evening's theme being Hopes and Dreams for the Future, the 500 women present collaborated in small groups on defining their own hopes and dreams. Each group's wish was written on a large organza leaf which was added to the symbolic sukkah gracing the stage. Silk panels made by local artists in previous years were also on display.

Participants in the celebration included the musical group Lilith's Triangle; singer Batsheva; musicians Galia Shaked and Alma Coefman; Deena Mandell; Helen Zukerman, NIFC president; and Marsha Metter. Refreshments appropriate to the harvest festival were donated by Estherelke Kaplan.

Vision TV was on hand to tape a segment of Skylight for broadcast on Oct. 17 at 10 p.m. and Oct. 18 at 1:30 p.m.

Congress seeks upgraded role at Somalia inquiry

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Canadian Jewish Congress is seeking expanded status at the inquiry into the Canadian Armed Forces (CAF) in Somalia because of a lack of expertise about racism on the part of the inquiry's staff.

The staff doesn't have the background to fully elicit information from witnesses about racism in the military, said Keith Landy, counsel for Congress at the commission of inquiry. And comments by Cmdr. Paul Jenkins, who authored a report on right-wing extremists in the military, have caused concern to Congress' racism experts, Landy added.

Last week, Jenkins told the commission that not all right-wing expremists are racists. "That shows there is not a tremendous understanding in the security branch of the CAF of what a right-wing extremist is," Landy said. "By their very nature, they are racist."

Landy, who was in the midst of cross-examining Jenkins when the inquiry adjourned, said the officer's statement "shows a lack of sophistication in terms of their dealing with right-wing extremist groups."

Turning his attention to other inquiry issues, Landy said "it was evident by the lack of hard questioning or any challenge to the evidence being presented that without our being there, a lot of statements by Jenkins would have gone in unchallenged."

Congress, which obtained limited status in the spring, is seeking to expand its status so it will be able to cross-examine witnesses without having to first seek permission of the inquiry.

In evidence presented last week, a May 1993 security intelligence report said "of the 65 individuals in the Canadian Forces (CF) as having some involvement in right-wing activities, 13 have had some recent connection to CFB Petawawa."

One unnamed corporal was "recently seen at a Heritage Front activity in Toronto in a leadership role. He is also associated with the Church of the Creator, a right wing racist group ... He served in the [CF] from 1982-90," the report stated.

A secret unit called SIROS (Security Intelligence Reporting On Skinheads) was created in 1991 to investigate extremists in the military. It reported in February 1993 that "only two regular force and two reserve force members have been identified as actively recruiting at least one other member."

That report went on to say that "there are some indications that the number of CF members involved in [extremist] activities is increasing, a reflection of the increasing problem in Canadian society as a whole. The total number involved in small ... Recruiting by civilian groups within CF units does not appear to be a significant problem."

Foster families honored for their caring, giving

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — It takes a special kind of person to parent not only their own children, but someone else's as well.

Especially if those other children are troubled, unhappy, emotionally or physically needy.

This special breed is the foster parent, and this week, Canadian Foster Family Week, has been set aside to honor them.

Jewish Family & Child Service (JF&CS) is responsible for foster parenting in the Jewish community, as it has been the officially designated Jewish children's aid society since 1982.

That means, explains JF&CS executive assistant Florence Weinberger, the service is called at any time of day or night if a child is picked up on the streets, if they are found at home in need of care, if tragedy has struck his or her family.

"More than once we have come in the morning and found a toddler running around in a diaper, clutching a bottle."

Some children are put into care voluntarily, such as when a single mother has to go to the hospital and there is no one to care for her children until she gets better. Others are there by court order, as when the parents are abusive, or alcoholics, or for one reason or another can't provide a safe environment.

Many children are in foster care for only a short time — others may stay for years.

Whatever the case, JF&CS provides a per diem subsidy to the foster family, and pays for extras such as tutoring or orthodontics.

They also provide a bar or bat mitzvah for each child, which includes buying t'fillin for every boy in care.

Each family is assessed, both before becoming foster parents, and for each child they take in, to ensure that the match will be successful.

"Many of these kids have been already tossed around from place to place. We don't want them to feel they have blown it again."

The agency also gives continuing education programs for the foster parents every month, dealing with such matters as adolescent psychiatry or behavior modification.

David and Tami Rosen, the parents of five of their own children, have been foster parents for 15 years.

"Our friends had enjoyed being foster parents, and suggested we try it," Tami Rosen told The CJN.

The Rosens offer emergency care (they felt long-term care would be too hard on their large family), and have children from one or two nights to three or four months.

"We might get a call at one or two in the morning, that a teenager is on speed and needs care. They might be abused. Or they just might have trouble getting along at home."

Usually, she said, they have a multitude of problems, and the whole family works hard to help them cope and deal with their problems.

"We would like to believe that each child leaves with something they didn't come in with."

Admitting that her own children "sometimes hate it," she feels that the experience has been mostly a positive one for her family.

"My kids don't remember a time when there weren't foster kids here," she said. "They accept it as a way of life. It makes them — and us — feel good."

She admits that sometimes fostering is very difficult for her and David as well. They get support from the agency as well as from other foster parents.

The main requirement to be a foster parent is to be "loving, caring and giving," Weinberger says.

Echoing the service's recent campaign, Weinberger pleads "if you have room in your heart and your home for a Jewish child, call Jewish Family and Child Service, 416-638-7800."

Oncology chair set

TORONTO — A $1.1-million gift from Albert Latner and his family, and Dynacare Ltd., has enabled Mount Sinai Hospital and the University of Toronto to establish a joint chair for research in head and neck oncology, making the hospital North America's largest treatment centre for thyroid and parathyroid oncology.

As an endowed faculty position, the chair will benefit head and neck oncology research, treatment and teaching at Mount Sinai Hospital.

Ultimately, this work will benefit all forms of cancer research.

Dr. Jeremy Freeman, co-leader of the Joint Head and Neck Oncology Program in the Departments of Otolaryngology and Surgery at Mount Sinai and Professor of Surgery at U of T, will be the chair's first incumbent.

Israeli group challenges barriers to the disabled

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — For people with disabilities, Israel is a land of enormous potential and enormous barriers, says a blind Toronto lawyer who has both personal and professional knowledge of the subject.

David Lepofsky, criminal law counsel with the Ontario Ministry of the Attorney General, spoke along with Tzvia Admon, lawyer with B'Zchut, the Israeli Centre for Human Rights for Persons with Disabilities, at a recent New Israel Fund (NIF) of Canada program held at Holy Blossom Temple.

Two sign language interpreters were on hand for the program on The Disabled in Israel: Removing Barriers to Equality.

Lepofsky, who volunteered at B'Zchut last summer, said that Israel would be expected to offer more to disabled people than a country like Canada for reasons including the number of war wounded, the large number of new buildings, the country's tradition of government support (such as olim receive) and the sophisticated level of technology.

"The reality is that Israel is at least as barrier-prone if not more so than Canada," said Lepofsky, adding that Canada is "considerably worse" than the United States.

In Jerusalem, said Lepofsky, a large number of four-storey buildings do not have elevators. Even the offices of the Department of Justice are not accessible by elevator, he noted.

Other barriers in Israel include:
- A dearth of sidewalk and curb ramps;
- Inaccessible public transit;
- High taxes on imports including speech-synthesizing computers, resulting in a price more than triple that here (about $8,000 to $9,000 in Canada).

The good news, said Lepofsky, is that B'Zchut, a three-year-old grass roots organization largely funded by the NIF, is working to challenge these barriers.

Israel has few laws dealing with the disabled, said Admon, one of two lawyers working for the organization. The country's equal opportunity employment laws apply to gender, race, sexual orientation and marital status, but not disability, she added.

Laws that do exist are not necessarily fully implemented, Admon said.

B'Zchut is addressing the problem through litigation of individual cases and law reform efforts. Its clients include people from every sector of Israeli society with any type of disability.

Lepofsky helped B'Zchut draft a proposed equal rights act for people with disabilities, influenced by the human rights laws of Canada and other countries.

Admon expects the proposal, which was submitted formally to the Knesset in the summer, to be implemented in some form in about a year.

Sure you want your kids to grow up knowing more than you...
(but not by the time they're eight.)

Sending your children to a Jewish Day School says a great deal about you.

It means you have an appreciation and respect for Jewish tradition and values. It means you want your child to have a genuinely meaningful Jewish education. It means your child's welfare is paramount.

But what about you?

It's not enough to just educate your children.

You, too, deserve a continuing Jewish education. And your children deserve a father or mother who can help them grow in school.

Which is why you'll want to know about a special program created with you in mind. It's called Partners in Torah.

Partners in Torah will team you up with a mentor you can relate to. Together you'll enjoy an hour a week of stimulating Jewish learning.

What's more, you choose the topic. You set the pace. We take care of the rest.

And it's absolutely free!

Imagine, just one hour a week will enable you to learn with your children - not just from them.

So call today ... and start learning Wednesday evening, October 25 at the BAYT in Thornhill

Because you want your kids to know more than you ... But not just yet.

PARTNERS IN TORAH TORONTO
Jointly Sponsored by Ohr Somayach & Aish HaTorah in cooperation with Beth Avraham Yoseph of Toronto Congregation

Principles of debate

The Jewish people has entered yet a new passageway in the corridors of our history. The people in Israel and the people of Israel stand, possibly, and at long last, on the threshold of an historic reconciliation with at least some of the nations with whom they share the Middle East. As with all true reconciliations, the process will take many years.

The view from this new, untested threshold evokes anxieties and fears. As we wrote last week, "divisions and the separations" are occurring in Israel as a result. One "camp" believes that we must proceed with the peace process despite the risks. The other "camp" believes that we must desist from that process precisely because of those risks.

The anxieties and the fears felt in Israel are also felt in the Diaspora. It is only natural that to cope with the anxieties and the fears, we cleave to comfortable, familiar loyalties: our ideologies, our political comrades, our religious beliefs. Thus, "the divisions and the separations" that are occurring in Israel are also occurring in the Diaspora.

It is painfully evident that each side is unable and unwilling to see merit in the other's approach. The chasm appears to be widening, fracturing a little bit more each day as rhetoric becomes more inflamed and behaviors more extreme.

In our view, however, the future of the people depends as much upon how we deal with these divisions and separations – both in Israel and in the Diaspora – as upon the particular passageway which the people travels, or perhaps stumbles along, through the darkened corridor.

To bridge the separations, some intra-community behavioral principles should apply. We humbly offer the following to the Jews of the Diaspora:

1. The beginning point of debate should also be its ending point, namely, inherent, deeply-held respect for the other person. This does not require agreement with the other; it does though, require acceptance of the sincerity of the view held by the other.

2. Debate should never exceed the bounds of simple civility. There is no room for insult or invective. There is no place at all or ever for aspersion and ridicule.

3. Debate must contain honest, consistently applied standards. Gary Rosenblatt, the publisher and editor of The Jewish Week of New York aptly illustrated the application of this principle in a recent column:

"If we would call a non-Jew who describes the Israeli government in Nazi terms an anti-Semite, how would we characterize an Orthodox newspaper that compares the Jerusalem government to the Nazis? And if we would castigate a non-Jew who insults rabbis, what do we say of an editor of a liberal Jewish magazine who calls Rabbi Shlomo Riskin of Efrat the embodiment of Jewish immorality and hatred?"

4. Debate must be premised on minimum shared values. In some quarters, this principle itself will be dismissed as an impossibility, indeed the root cause of the chasm separating the sides. Nevertheless, we propose two broad minimum values which should define the parameters of the debate on the peace process.They are two pillars supporting Israel's foundation.

First, there must be loyalty to the rules of Israel's democracy as determined by the citizens of Israel. Second, there must be loyalty to the concept of klal Yisrael, the realization that the fate of Jews throughout the world is interrelated, interconnected and interdependent, and that the modern state of Israel is at the physical and metaphysical centre of that fate.

Behavior which reaches beyond the parameters of the minimum values ultimately reaches into Israel's foundation, shaking, destabilizing and possibly harming it. Once destabilized, an unsteady foundation will tremble not only in Israel. It will also reverberate through the corners of the Jewish world. And as our destiny is shared, so too will be the tremors.

Yes vote dangerous for non-francophones

Re: Your editorial on the hypothetical remarks made by Marcel Masse regarding the possible outcome of a No vote on the referendum. He speculates about a possible backlash against non-francophones, if they indeed are the cause of the vote swinging unfavorably. Masse is speaking hypothetically, but there is good reason to listen to him seriously. Remember a little while ago, the Royal Bank of Canada had its knuckles rapped by Jacques Parizeau when they made critical remarks about the referendum. Parizeau warned the bank that they should watch what they're saying since they do a lot of business with the province.

Let's move the hypothetical argument along just a notch or two. Supposing Quebec does separate, and suppose great masses of non-francophones leave with their assets. We've already seen that in 1976. Do you think the Parti Quebecois government will sit idly by and watch this hemorrhage? It is very possible they will put severe impediments in the way of such disastrous bloodletting.

Those non-francophones in Quebec who might be contemplating leaving the province should think seriously about this prospect and at least be prepared. Combine a virulent nationalism with xenophobia and you don't have to guess too much who one of the first scapegoats will be. Remember Germany of 1932.

Wants new status for non-Orthodox in Israel

The report on an interview with Prof. Shlomo Eckstein, president of Bar-Ilan University, (CJN, Sept. 28), contained a reference which may be interpreted ambiguously. Specifically, in discussing the efforts of Bar-Ilan to bridge the gap between Orthodox and secular Jews in Israel, where the gap, he avers, is greater than in the Diaspora, Eckstein notes that in North America "even Reform Jews are connected to the Jewish community through their synagogues and their rabbis. In Israel either you belong to the observant or you don't."

I have been assured by the president of the Canadian Friends of Bar-Ilan that no slur to the Reform community was intended, and I accept that interpretation. However, it occurs to me that Eckstein and Bar-Ilan should be working to extend official recognition to the non-Orthodox in Israel, so that the Conservative and Reform movements, benefiting by the legitimacy and support bestowed through official recognition, might make inroads into the majority secular segment which the good professor wishes to connect to Judaism.

Has negative view of peace process

Sheldon Kirshner is correct in his conclusion that "as a result of ... the ongoing debate on peace ... a deep rift (has emerged) in the community." (CJN, Sept. 14)

The rift is not unlike the Pharisaic-Hebrew Christian schism during the second Temple era. Then as now the primary "fault line" was regarding the former's attempts at Judaic continuity and the latter's wholesale misinterpretation of Judaism's raison d'etre. Throughout Jewish history select Jews, like Shabbtai Tzvi, as well as gentile detractors, have failed to recognize the implications of Judaism revolutionary covenantial basis.

This biblical teaching (Genesis 18:15-17) that the idea of the "just and right" must be actualized in corresponding actions was the precursor of Aristotle's Law of Causality, which states that specific actions have specific consequences. The present rift, documented by the recent AJC poll, identifies two Judaisms. The first, following Pharisaic logic, relies on the integration of textual and experimental knowledge as the basis for its rejection of the "peace process." The other, following the Hebrew-Christian model, focuses on universal concepts divorced from facts, as the basis for their support of the Oslo accords.

Thus, rather than separating from mainstream Judaism, the Jewish descendants of the Hebrew-Christian position in the Israeli government and the Diaspora, are working to universalize Judaism from within. The first step to preventing Israel's self-destruction via the dilution of our Talmudic legacy is identifying this subversive element within Judaism and confronting it as inconsistant with Jewish theology and history.

Says escapees did not save Hungarian Jews

Re: interview with C. Mordowicz, by Ben Rose, CJN, Sept. 21, Mordowicz' testimony on June 20, 1944, at Svety Jury Monastery was not decisive, as it reached the Vatican in mid-October! Admiral Horthy stopped deportations on July 7 and Sonderkommando smashed crematorium No. 4.

The pre-eminent authority on the subject, Prof. R. Branam, in Anatomy of the Auschwitz Death Camp (Indiana Press, 1994, p. 465) states that Horthy's decision was motivated by domestic and international factors.

Radio commentator did us favor

Thank you to Brian Henderson for reiterating the same centuries-old claims that blame the Jews for the ills of the world. It's nice to know that not much has changed in the last few hundred years. It's nice to know that no matter how much we may try to forget our past, forsake our heritage and assimilate into our surroundings, we will always remain Jews because of people like you who will always be there to remind us who we are. Thank you once again. You did us a great service!

Childhood memories of a Hebron massacre

By MIRIAM SCHNEID-OFSEYER

It was Friday. My father's last Friday, the 17th day of the month of Av 1929, in the city of Hebron.

We were in front of the house, Tatte and I. The week before, he had been in Jerusalem with his Lubavicher Rebbe. But he returned home when he heard the rumors about a pogrom that Arabs were planning in Hebron. His wife and three children were there and they might be in danger.

I could see him in the distance. He was tall, like a giant and so handsome. Red beard and blue eyes. I watched and I was screaming: "Look at my father!"

Suddenly there was a noise on the quiet street.

Screams in Arabic. A riot.

Tatte grabbed me in his arms. I was already a big girl, 5 years old. Was I not too heavy for him? Probably not, because he skipped stairs, when he brought me to the second floor, to the safety of our apartment. Home. Behind the locked door. Our apartment had a strong door.

Momma recited the blessings over the Sabbath candles. Her face was soft, smooth, pale. It had been a difficult week without dad, but she did not complain. She knew that he enjoyed the week. He loved the world of the Chassidim. They were his friends and his Rebbe, and he loved every minute.

He told her he had sung a new nigun, one that he had composed.

Now we sang the Sabbath songs, Tatte's voice leading our thin voices, Mother joining in. The candles shone with a special Sabbath glow. There were fresh challot that Momma baked in the morning and there was wine. I sipped a drop. The wine was sharp and sweet, but I liked the taste of the challah better. Then I soaked my challah in the wine. This was the taste I loved best. I was sorry I finished it so fast, as I would have to wait till next Sabbath for more. It was a pleasure I waited for eagerly the whole week.

Father was telling us about the Rebbe. He was telling us about Jerusalem. Mother listened, looking into his eyes. I thought she loved him very much. She was quiet most of the time, but this time she started to speak about her father and mother, my grandparents, whom she had left behind in Lahoysk in the province of Minsk in Russia, when she went with her husband to the Holy Land.

And father quoted: "That is why a man would leave his father and mother and would cling to his wife, and they will become one flesh."

Mother suddenly said, trying not to sound as if she were complaining: "But here I don't have a soul. Not one close friend. Not even one girlfriend."

And dad answered: "But this is the land of Israel, the land of our forefathers. The Holy Land. And I am with you, and the children. Don't be sad."

Mom pretended to be happy. She smiled, so that dad would not be upset.

On Saturday, father started to pray at home. His prayer shawl was long and wide and covered him. He put it over his head and prayed, singing in a loud, clear voice. I wished to be able to sing the way he sang ... But my voice was so thin and sounded frightened. Let me just grow up, I promised myself, and I will sing like him.

There was noise outside and dad stopped his prayer.

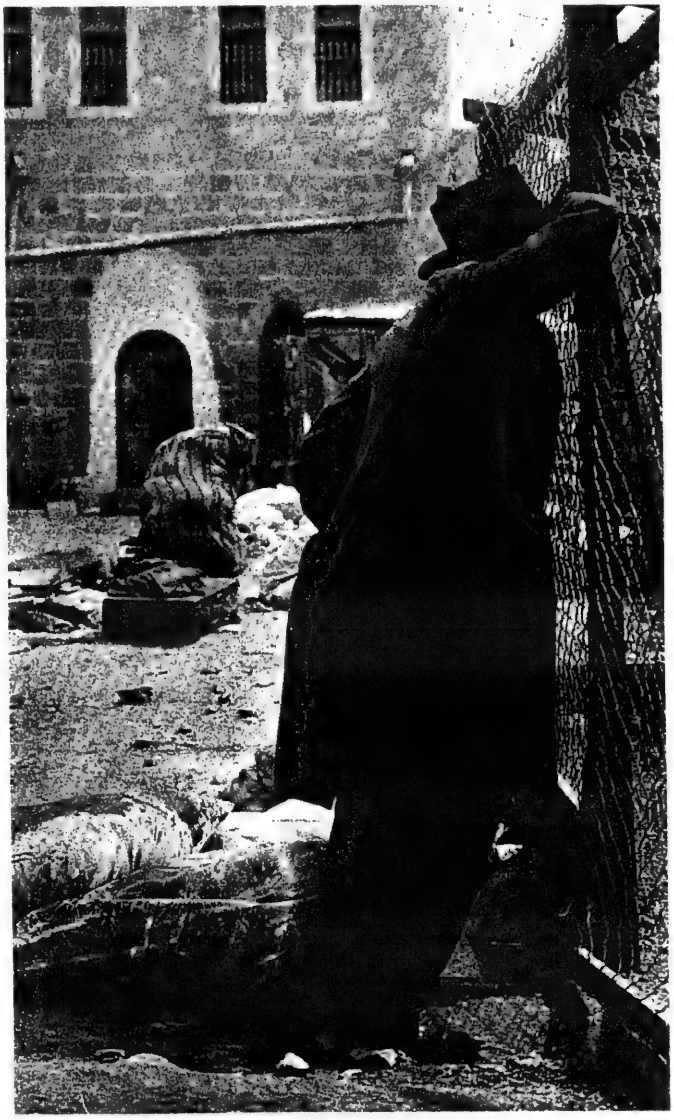
"What is the noise there?" I asked. "I want to open the door and see."

But dad warned me in a stern voice: "Don't go to the door, I forbid you to touch the door!"

They were knocking firmly and dad went to the door.

"Iftah, iftah, el yahud! Itbah el yahud!" (Open! Open you Jew! Slaughter the Jews!)

Momma embraced us and I felt that she was trembling. She was afraid. Dad was holding the door, but the pressure from outside continued. They were trying to break down the door. They pressed and tried to break the hinges of the door, but daddy was strong. He was standing against the whole mob, he on one side and all of them on the other.



In the aftermath of the massacre, shock, grief and mourning. Photo from The Jews in their Land, ed. D. Ben-Gurion, Doubleday & Co. Inc., 1966.

Daddy was going to win.

But then a sword pierced the door and cut his hand. His blood was dripping on the door, but he did not let go.

They succeeded in breaking the door. What a shout there was! They were already inside, crowds. They dragged my dad to the balcony. He was making them angry, fighting, trying not to die.

I was after him. I held on to him, embracing him, trying to shield him, trying to chase away the murderers.

I don't remember the axe that hit my head and I don't remember what happened right afterwards.

I didn't see how they killed my tatte. They probably left me lying there in a puddle of blood, sure that I was dead.

Sometime later, when the murderers had left the house, when dad was lying dead on the balcony and mother was in a puddle of blood inside the house, I went to see her.

The blood that came from my head had dripped onto my blue Sabbath dress. It was dry now and made the dress feel as if it had been starched. This was my prettiest dress.

But I was able to get up. I could walk. It was quiet. They had already gone away to kill in the next houses. On the balcony, close to the stairs was one of my blue socks. It probably fell from the heap of clothing that they carried away from the closets.

Suddenly I saw dad.

"Tatte! Tattenue!" I screamed. "Tatte, get up! Why do you lie like this? Look, I also have blood from my wound and I am speaking to you. Please, speak to me too, Tatte. Get up! Get up!"

"Tatte!" I pulled his hand, but the hand was heavy and slipped out of mine.

Then I ran to Momma. She was lying in the middle of the room on the floor. Blood kept dripping into the puddle near her from her slashed belly and from her slashed nose.

"Momma, Momma, Tatte does not want to get up. Tatte is lying in blood and does not want to get up. Tell him!"

"Perhaps Tatte cannot get up, mein kind. He might be sleeping. Give him some water. He might get up then."

"He is not sleeping. His eyes are open."

"Give him some water. Can you?"

I took the brass natla (a special container designed for washing hands before meals). It had two handles. I filled it up with water and it felt cold and heavy. I carried it like one carries a holy treasure.

"Tatte, drink a little water. Mother says so. Just a little. Why don't you move, Tatte? You are not sleeping. Can you hear me?"

I brought the water to his mouth and tried to put a few drops in it, but the natla was too heavy. The water poured all over and came out of his open mouth. He didn't drink, not even a drop.

Perhaps, I thought, if I wash the blood, he will be stronger and will be able to get up.

I took the white kerchief that was in the pocket of my Sabbath dress and dipped it in the water, but I did not succeed in cleaning the blood. New blood kept on coming.

I poured all the water on his face and the water flowed and became like a small reddish lake.

There were footsteps outside again. I ran and hid under the bed. My brother and sister had been hiding there the whole morning. They were clinging to one another, trembling.

When Sholi (Shalom Ber), my 4-year old brother, heard the noise in the morning, he did not know what to do and clung to my father who was holding the door. Then dad commanded him: "Hide under the bed!"

He did so, and Hasi (Hasida), my one-year- old sister, followed him.

"Sh ... sh ..." I said to them. "They are coming again. Don't move."

But they didn't need my warning. They were lying so quietly, almost not breathing.

I heard voices of people speaking Yiddish and moved closer to the edge of the bed to take a peak.

"What are you doing to my mother?" I screamed. "Where are you taking her?"

Somebody stretched out a hand to take me, but I moved farther under the bed.

Afterwards they lifted up the bed and found me and my brother and sister who kept holding on to one another.

They put Momma on a stretcher, then into a bus that drove her to Hadassah House. I sat near her on the bench. Other wounded people were sitting or lying.

"Water," my mother whispered.

"She is alive," somebody said, and gave her some water.

"But where is my tatte? Why didn't you take him along too?" I asked.

"They will bring him later. Sit quietly, poor orphan," said a woman dressed in white, who held my hand.

"What do you say? What is an orphan?" I asked.

When I was a young girl, my girlfriends used to ask me, "Why don't you want to kill all the Arabs?"

I am proud even today of the answer I gave them. I do not want to take revenge from the Arabs. The Arabs are not at fault for the murderers who killed my father ... If I were to know who killed my father, I would have the right to ask for revenge, but killing all the Arabs means to kill innocent victims who are not at fault, innocent victims, exactly as I was.

Families of the shtetl

By Jean M. Gerber

My father-in-law recently celebrated his 89th birthday. In 1920, at the age of 14, he left Yaltushkiev, a shtetl near Kiev and made his way to Antwerp with his mother and youngest siblings, Hymie and Max. There, a suspicious spot on his face detained him. His family sailed to America, leaving him in the care of strangers. A few weeks later he was allowed to board ship and so became the last of his family to escape Europe. The rest perished without trace.

My late mother-in-law also arrived after World War I, at the age of six. She had been left with relatives in Poland, while Annie and Fannie, her older siblings, and her father sailed to the New World.

Why am I recounting what to many readers seems a familiar story, conjuring up images of Tevye, Goldie, their five daughters, and lots of singing and dancing? Partly because I have long suspected that what we heard about shtetl days was a myth which obscured the real intensity of experiences like those of my in-laws, and partly because those stories confirm that the myth of the shtetl was suitable for Broadway melodies but distorts our ability to see the past clearly and prevents us from understanding the present truly.

I recommend reading Daughters of the Shtetl: Life and Labor in the Immigrant Generation, by Susan Anita Glenn (Ithaca: Cornell University Press, 1990), in order to understand what I am describing.

First, the book. Gentlemen should not be put off by its title. In reality, it is a saga of the family of the shtetl and the New World of tenements, crowded streets, sewing machines and unions.

This shtetl was not the home of Tevye and Goldie. It was hard-scrabble poverty, dirt, danger and often violent death. Poverty, caused by legal disabilities imposed on the Jews of the Czarist empire by decree, pushed Jews inexorably into smaller and poorer sections of the empire, the Pale of Settlement, a place of dwindling resources, pre-industrial economy and incredible population explosion among both Jews and non-Jews.

The numbers of children in the family portraits in our front hall — five surviving children in one, eight in another — were one of the factors that increased the pressure on Jews to emigrate. The other was the danger of pogroms, fomented by the regime, executed enthusiastically by local populations. Life was hard, families exhausted, the table (when not used to barricade the door) empty.

David Zelig ben Meshullam, my father-in-law, recalls how after the war three armies swept through — Reds, Whites and Cossacks — vying to hoist Jewish heads on their pikes and parade them through the town.

He also recalls the determined secularism of his mother. One day he was hustled into the synagogue, put in front of the Torah, and told to read. Fluent in Hebrew (he apparently was attending a Hebrew school run by Zionists), untutored in any religious practice, he read. He was congratulated and sent out to play. He had just become a man.

He also recalls the day a young couple was caught out in that same synagogue, consummating their relationship.

Back to the book. The author documents how poverty as much as persecution, drove the Jews westward. (We should remember that when we try vainly to distinguish between political and economic refugees.) Poverty meant everyone worked, thus twisting our romantic view of gender roles out of recognition. Did the father study? Only if he was rich or had a hard-working wife who ran the business, sold the eggs, washed other people's laundry, sewed other peoples' clothes. More often all worked, even the precious son. In fact, daughters might have had a chance at secular learning, meaning they could read and write in the language of the country! This kind of education was frowned upon for men, but tolerated for empty-headed women.

And who came to America and what happened then? Well, often the daughters came, either to relatives or as boarders. They went to work in places like the Triangle Shirtwaist factory of the infamous fire that killed over 300 of them. If the father came, he too had to find a place in the immigrant industry.

My father-in-law's family did it a bit differently. The poppa came, along with Mollie and Sam before World War I. My mother-in-law came with her older sisters Annie and Fannie. By all accounts it was the daughters and sons who sustained them all.

But what really changed was the momma. She of the market place in Russia was now tacitly or explicitly restricted to the home. No rubbing shoulders with strangers for her. She could sew at home or take in boarders, but to work outside was a shame.

And as many letters to the Forward attest (read Bintel Brief if you don't believe me) the poppa might desert the momma.

So the book says two things. The shtetl was already a place of change for good or evil, since circumstances forced the changes. The New World was another place of change. Jews coming off the boat brought with them a wide range of experiences, few of them those we see in Fiddler on the Roof. When they hit the mean streets of large eastern cities, they changed even more, opening up their families to another set of experiences with which their children had to cope. These included not only the (often) mythical glow of Shabbat candles, but more likely the late night lamps while all labored to finish their piece-work.

And as far as David Zelig goes, he left school at 15 to work in the clothing business, first as a cutter, then a designer and finally into business for himself. His brothers also went into business. His sister married and stayed home. There was not much singing and dancing except at weddings, but lots of gruelling work. Naturally the New World-born offspring all went to university, which, after all, was part of the plan.

And what does this have to do with us as Jews today? Next column, please.

The potency of language

By Arnold Ages

George Steiner, the eminent British scholar and writer, has remarked that words have the remarkable capacity to bless, construct and inspire — and to condemn, curse and destroy. Ancient Hebraic wisdom put it somewhat more dramatically: "Hachayim vehamavet b'yad halashon," (life and death hang on what is said).

Beyond its capacity to promote life and its opposite, language can also become victimized itself. The Nazis took the beautiful German of Goethe, Schiller and Heine and damaged it (one hopes not permanently) through the use of euphemisms such as "final solution" (Enloesung), "concentration camp" (Konzentrationslager), "insertion groups" (Einsatgruppen), and "special squads" (Sonderkommando) to mask the most hideous murders in history. During the trial in 1985 of a notorious Holocaust denier in Toronto, the defence lawyer referred to these "neutral" expressions as proof that the Nazis had not carried out any systematic extermination of Jews.

In today's world, the restraint of euphemism has disappeared and the use of words to promote hate seems to be growing by leaps and bounds. To paraphrase the well-known dictum about religion: Some people seem to have only enough words to hate and not enough to love. Sometimes the expression of hate is simply misguided. A Toronto TV personality confessed that he mistakenly used the word disproportionate in referring to the number of Jewish lawyers listed in the Toronto telephone book. He hadn't intended, he said in a public apology, to convey a negative connotation in his use of that word. Case closed.

Internet surfers have discovered, however, that no apologies are forthcoming from the purveryors of Holocaust denial and anti-Semitica. They have now discovered that hateful speech, thanks to the metastasizing effect of modem transmission, can reach across oceans and continents and engulf millions with its pollution.

Besides, this unfortunate degradation of words by the haters should not obscure the glory that resides in language itself. Steiner has also noted that one question which has never been answered by linguists, including Chomsky, is why there are so many languages in the world and why some populations living a few miles from each other, speak languages that are totally unrelated.

And what of the incredible complexity of some languages? The Mexican-Indian language Quechua, Eugene Nida reports, "begins with a root and may be followed by a number of different suffixes and clitics in as many as eight positions in some dialects, with the result that many verbs have more than 10,000 forms!"

The staggering variety and multiplicity of languages remains one of the great unsolved mysteries of our world, but one school of thought suggests that this very profusion of languages is emblematic of humankind's desire for freedom and individual expression. The gift of language separates us from the animal world and from other human beings who do not share our speech, our conceptual environment.

It was the Hebrew Bible, of course, which showed the world the creative power of words. The first verses of Genesis show how the Eternal wills the universe into existence through the majesty of words. The key phrase in the creation pattern is "And the Lord said." Thus words become the agency for the greatest adventure of humankind. That adventure, moreover, is repeated every Friday evening in the Magen Avot prayer which reads, in part: "He restores life through His word."

The potency of words to construct and reconstruct our world is a heritage which the Hebrew Bible and Jewish civilization have passed on to the modern world. It's a lesson which is sorely needed at a time when words are continually used to desecrate and destroy.

My bar mitzvah

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut

I would never have thought of writing an article about celebrating my own bar mitzvah. After all, it was an event that — come next November — happened 70 years ago and is really not of historical importance.

But a few weeks ago, a letter arrived on my desk which stirred old memories. It was written by a physician in Massachusetts, who said that he was the grandson of Rabbi Martin Solomonski, who indeed was the rabbi on the day I celebrated my rite of passage.

The writer and I have corresponded since, and I look forward to meeting him, sharing what memories I have of the gentle person who, back in 1925, gave me his blessing after I had done my modest share.

Sifrei Torah

I really don't recall him very clearly, but one of his gestures has stayed clearly in my mind. Whenever he reached the moment of giving his sermon, he first turned to the Ark and stood there silently. Then he turned around, faced the congregation and delivered his message.

His gesture had a strange effect on me, for while I knew full well that the Ark contained the sifrei Torah, his meditations or prayer before the closed Ark conveyed a sense of mystery. Somehow, when he turned to the Ark, his spiritual persona seemed to detach itself from the rest of the congregation and became intensely solitary. I never imitated his posture during the many years of my rabbinate, but whenever I turn to the Ark, his image flashes before my eyes and the sense of mystery grabs hold of my soul and I thank him for that sense.

The text of my Haftorah was a great puzzlement to me. It was taken from the opening of the First Book of Kings, where we read that King David was old and "could not get heat." His counsellors decided that a beautiful young maiden might help.

Alas, the text reports, nothing happened. Later on, I understand this cryptic passage to mean that the aged king had lost his potency, but the Midrash has a different reading and tells us that the king purposely did not enter into any relations with the young woman, because his quota of wives was already filled. I asked my Dad what all of this meant, but he brushed me off and simply said, "Never mind the meaning, just learn it." I don't remember whether I discussed it with Rabbi Solomonski when we met prior to my public appearance, but most likely I did not ask the question again.

Quota of wives

After the service was over, our friends came for a kiddush to our abode and bought their customary gifts. It is my pleasure to tell you that I still have a good many of them. No, they were neither fountain pens nor the equivalent of 1925 Power Rangers. It was customary in those days in Berlin to give books to the celebrant, and I became the fortunate recipient of a basic library, Jewish and general. Many of the books — which did not pretend to be for children but for later life — still grace my shelves.

It was a modest reception, but it lasted me a lifetime.

The Kirshner File

Mordecai Richler looks back in retrospection

Mordecai Richler's quest for greatness still eludes him, notwithstanding his status as one of Canada's finest writers.

Some years ago, in an essay in the New York Times, he confessed

By Sheldon Kirshner

that his overriding ambition was "to write at least one novel that will last, that will make me remembered after my death."

At 64, Richler admits that he has not achieved this objective. "If I thought I had, I'd have quit," he said in an interview the other afternoon in a midtown Toronto bar. "You start off with the dream of perfection, but it never quite turns out like that."

Perhaps, as he suggested, it's a question of age. "Novels become harder to write as you get older. You become more self-critical."

Be that as it may, Richler is hardly dissatisfied with the body of his work, which includes collections of acerbic essays and journalism, film scripts and three children's books, the latest of which is Jacob Two-Two's First Spy Case (McClelland & Stewart).

Looking back at a career which spans some four decades, Richler describes his best novels as The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz (1959) and Solomon Gursky Was Here (1989).

Not surprisingly, Richler produces many drafts of a novel before he finally submits the manuscript to the publisher. "You get to the point where you have to let go," he said, puffing on a cigarillo. "What's difficult to accept is that passages that came easy are better than those you rewrote 12 times."

As a rule, Richler, who puts pen to paper virtually every day, doesn't "plan out" a novel in any elaborate fashion. As he put it, "I don't start with a map. Sometimes, it's with a situation or a character."

He dashed off The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz, a comic classic, but struggled with Solomon Gursky Was Here, a satire which flits between the 19th and 20th centuries and took five years to finish.

By personal choice, Richler's first published novel, The Acrobats (1954) remains out of print. Richler, born on Montreal's Jeanne Mance Street and raised on St. Urbain Street, considers it far too derivative. "It's not written in a voice I can call my own. It hits a lot of false notes. I was writing about things I didn't really know about."

Rejected by eight publishers, The Acrobats was published several years after he had moved to Paris and then London after having dropped out of college.

Having devoured Malraux, Hemingway and Camus as a youth, Richler modelled himself after these literary giants, and wrongly believed that his own natural material, hewn from the rock of Montreal Jewry, was too commonplace for fiction. "I did't find my own voice until Duddy Kravitz," said Richler.

However, with his second novel, Son Of A Smaller Hero (1955), he began to delve into the world of his childhood, to which he has repeatedly returned.

Richler's father and grandfather were junk dealers, though one of his uncles in New York City wrote for the popular Yiddish theatre. His mother was a housewife whose father had been a rabbi. The Richlers were Orthodox Jews, and although Richler attended a Jewish parochial school, he turned away from traditional Judaism at an early age, an act of rebellion which alienated him from his family.

Irretrievably shaped by his background, Richler drew on its richness in a series of acclaimed novels from St. Urbain's Horseman, which won the 1972 Governor General's Award for literature, to Joshua Then And Now (1980).

In books such as these, Richler sought "to illuminate certain Jewish conundrums and moral contradictions." Mercilessly satirizing the habits, mores and conventions of Montreal's Jewish community, Richler poked fun at the rush to join the mainstream, the anglicization of names, the transformation of synagogues into community centres and the decline of scholarship.

Not all his readers, of course, were amused. Some attacked him harshly as a self-hating Jew. Of his detractors, Richler is philosophic. "I never set out to offend or to ingratiate myself," he explained.

In recent years, particularly since his article on the dark undercurrents of Quebec nationalism appeared in the New Yorker, Richler's generally adversarial relationship with Montreal Jewry has improved. He takes the transformation in his stride. "It was very amusing that I was suddenly in favor, yet there are still elements in the community who are offended."

He singles out "functionaries in the Canadian Jewish Congress" who distanced themselves from Oh Canada! Oh Quebec! (1992). "I think of a lot of them as court Jews," he said dismissively.

Based upon his controversial New Yorker essay, Oh Canada! Oh Quebec! ferreted out the anti-Semitic dimensions of French Canadian nationalism and characterized Quebec as a tribal society.

"French Canadian nationalism is not nearly what it was in the 1930s and 1940s," he noted, "but they [French Canadians] still revere Abbe Groulx," whose writings are marred by anti-Jewish animus.

Planning to vote No in the Oct. 30 referendum, Richler predicts that the Yes side will lose by a 52-48 margin. He expects a further erosion of Quebec's Jewish population should the separatists triumph. "We'll be left with the poor and the old."

Jews, he said, would feel uncomfortable in a sovereign Quebec. "Jews don't like any kind of nationalism — unless it's in Israel."

In his view, an independent Quebec would evolve into a "narrow, tribal state" in which "there wouldn't be room for the rest of us."

Richler, who divides his time between the Eastern Townships, Montreal and London, feels unthreatened by the spectre of separatism. "The impact would be negligible on me. I'm a free man. I'm not tied down to a corner shop."

Turning to another topic, the Middle East, which he explored in a book of reminiscence and reportage entitled This Year In Jerusalem (1994), Richler said he sees no alternative to the peace agreements signed by Israel and the PLO since 1993. Nevertheless, he regards the Oslo process as "very risky and fraught with difficulties."

A liberal who tends to support the Peace Now movement, Richler is of the opinion that the establishment of a Palestinian state on the West Bank and in the Gaza Strip may well defuse the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Screenplays

The politics of Quebec and the Middle East aside, Richler is busy these days promoting Jacob Two-Two's First Spy Case, a fast-moving yarn replete with exotic characters and resounding to a happy ending.

He wrote his first kids' book, Jacob Two-Two Meets The Hooded Fang, 20 years ago upon the request of his son, Noah, one of Richler's five children. It was widely praised, and in 1987, he churned out Jacob Two-Two And The Dinosaur, the second in what is now a beloved series.

Richler, who composes his stories on an electric typewriter, his concession to modern technology, no longer accepts film script commissions. "I'm not a great fan of group activities," he said.

He produced his last screenplays, The Apprenticeship Of Duddy Kravitz and Joshua Then And Now, in the 1970s and 1980s.

Currently, Richler is laboring on another novel, but, being superstitious, he is loath to divulge details.

Reflecting on his success, he considers himself amazingly fortunate. In a field littered with numerous casualties, Richler has reached dizzying literary and financial heights.

"I'm paid for doing the things I like," he mused as he sipped on a drink. "I'm very blessed. It's a pretty good life if it works out."

Knowledge, life must complement each other

By RABBI PERETZ WEIZMAN

This Shabbat we start the Torah reading with the beginning of G-ds' creation of the world. It opens with the statement, "In the beginning G-d created the heaven and the earth." The order of creation is meticulously outlined. The creation of mankind is the conclusion of the history of creation.

"The world" means mankind, you and I. Without mankind there is no awareness of G-d and His creation. Therefore, the Torah elaborates extensively about the appearance of human beings in the world. It states that G-d created man, named him Adam and placed him in the Garden of Eden. One of the first commandments to this first human being was, even though there were two trees in the garden, mankind might eat from the Tree of Life, but was not permitted to eat from the Tree of Knowledge. If he ate of it, he would die.

We know that humanity is elevated above all creatures because of the G-d given gift of knowledge, of reason and intellect. Here G-d admonished man against eating from the Tree of Knowledge.

Three times a day we thank G-d for being the gracious giver of knowledge, "Atah chonen l'adam da'as."

We are considered the pearl of G-ds' creation. As the psalmist said, "Mankind is a little lower than angels" — because of the ability to think, to create. Yet in the account of the creation, man is deprived of this faculty.

What is the meaning of this story? Certainly G-d doesn't want mankind to live in darkness without knowledge and without intelligent perceptions.

Every student of Torah knows the difference between Torah and theology. Theology is the study of man about G-d. Torah is the study of G-d about mankind; in other words, Torah is interested that we should know ourselves. Torah is geared to defining ourselves. Da et atzmecha is the motto and purpose of Torah!

The story mentioned above illustrates human nature and human weakness and teaches how to curb and control our base inclinations.

The story of the Tree of Knowledge contains a profound moral lesson for humanity. Although knowledge is vitally important, knowledge without a Tree of Life is most destructive. Knowledge has to be applied for life, not for destruction. The Tree of Life and The Tree of Knowledge must complement each other. The Torah pleads with mankind: Do not use your knowledge to create death, misery and suffering. Do not use it to create atom bombs or to enslave people. Use it constructively, not destructively. Use it for life!

Gas chambers were built by learned engineers. Jewish children were poisoned by educated physicians. Jewish infants were killed by trained nurses. Women and children were shot and killed by high school and college graduates. The Germans had knowledge but lacked heart and compassion. The Torah admonishes mankind to not separate the Tree of Life from the Tree of Knowledge — by doing so you will create blind fanatics. You will produce learned monsters, skilled psychopaths or educated Eichmanns.

This is why our Torah is called Torat chaim — a Torah for life, dedicated to life. Not to destroy life! Progress and technology produce machines, Torah moulds and shapes humanity to be humane. Heart and mind must go together. Reason and compassion constitute the assurance of human existence.

Fine arts alone cannot protect humanity from evil and bestiality. Knowledge and information by themselves will create hell. The combination of knowledge and life will create a paradise for humanity. Man will be restored by knowledge and compassion to his place in the Garden of Eden.

Rabbi Peretz Weizman is the spiritual leader of Bnay Abraham Synagogue in Winnipeg.

Defining myself as a Jew

By AVRUM NADIGEL

GUEST VOICES

For two years I have been struggling within the Conservative movement to define myself as a Jew. While this task is weighty enough for most, I have the added burden of attempting this feat in Montreal, sometimes called "the home of Orthodoxy" (which some consider the "true" Judaism).

However, this setting has been more of a blessing than a curse. The volatile environment a liberal Montreal Jew has to contend with encourages him to fight for legitimacy and acceptance for his denominational beliefs and rituals. Those who subscribe to non-Orthodox ideologies will be called to task by many Jewish Montrealers who ask why they've strayed from "normative Judaism."

I can remember one particular Shabbat night when I attended a tish organized by a local Orthodox synagogue. The president of the shul wasted no time in questioning my allegiance to Conservative Judaism. "You mean to tell me you agree with how they treat women's issues? I personally feel you should spend more time in our congregation to experience Judaism the way it is supposed to be practised." Needless to say, I was quite happy to be davening in a Conservative shul the next day.

My continuous struggle for Jewish self-definition motivated me to read, argue and practise Judaism. This is why I believe federations and congregational rabbis have to start challenging Jews to be Jewish. This approach is not novel, since our Torah is replete with stories of personal struggles leading to self-actualization and religious fulfilment.

Yet somehow we have forgotten this important message. I no longer dwell on the negative sides of being a liberal Jew in Montreal. Instead I channel this energy into study and prayer.

What two years of studying and discussing Jewish ideas has revealed to me is that to retain any sense of intellectual honesty with respect to my Judaic practice, I cannot subscribe to an Orthodox ideology. For all of their religious zeal, warmth and low mechitzas, I am not a literalist. As a result, I have begun to accept my fate and no longer resent my marginal place in the Montreal Jewish community.

This realization has allowed me to befriend followers of both Orthodox and non-Orthodox Judaism. However, I will not be coy when discussing the merits of Conservative Judaism. I strongly support the movement's ability to confront modernity without apologies or regrets. Additionally, I feel that all the movements have contributed to the creativeness and richness of our traditions.

I would like to clarify one issue. I am not discussing the merits of big synagogue Conservative Judaism. To assess any of the movements based on their congregants' lifestyle or that of their executive board would be erroneous.

Could you imagine basing the merits of Orthodoxy on the practices of their congregants here. Ninety-eight per cent of my family and friends who are members of Orthodox shuls are practising a Judaism which is anything but "Orthodox." So please, spare me the "Big synagogues are for fashion shows" speech.

I have attained great spiritual moments at the Shaare Zion Congregation, where I work and daven. Yes it takes some work to reach high levels of kavannah (intending and feeling our prayers). But it also takes work to reach the top of Mount Tremblant on a Saturday morning.

Sarah's relationship to God explored

By RACHAEL TURKIENICZ

This month's Torah readings deal with the development of the relationship between God and Abraham. The reader experiences their discovery of each other, and ultimately their mutual pledge as expressed in the covenant. Abraham is told that the fulfilment of this pledge will occur through the offspring he will share with his wife Sarah, but we do not see a relationship developing between God and Sarah. She is mentioned in many of the scenes that occur between the two primary figures, but she is usually at the sidelines or passively acted upon.

Is there truly no independent relationship between Sarah and God, or does this relationship emerge from between the lines of the text?

During the course of the covenant, Abraham undergoes a name change. God introduces the Hebrew letter hey into the name Abram, thus forming Abraham. The letter hey is understood to be used because it appears in God's Name. The Bible states that the letter was included because Abraham is now destined to be the "father of many nations" (hey begins the world in Hebrew for "many"). Interestingly, if you translate Abraham's name before the name change, you arrive at the same meaning. Abram already means "the father of many." Therefore, the letter from God's name has not altered Abraham's destiny in the least. The inclusion of this letter states that although his destiny may remain unchanged, the presence of God is now part of that destiny.

Sarah likewise undergoes a name change. Sarai (ending in the Hebrew letter yod) is now changed to Sarah (ending with the Hebrew letter hey). One notices that Sarah's name already ended with a letter from God's Name (yod), and it is now being replaced with another letter from God's Name.

Following the model above, one concludes that God was already present in the life of Sarai — a relationship between Sarai and God already existed. This relationship was altered in order to have Sarah and Abraham pursue a common relationship with God which will pass to their children.

And yet the situations detailed in the Bible treat Abraham and Sarah differently. Abraham undergoes tests orchestrated by God — Sarah does not. Abraham bears a physical sign of the covenant — Sarah need not. Yet these changes do not necessarily speak less of Sarah; perhaps they speak of a relationship already formed that does not need testing and physical reminders.

An ancient midrash hints at this different relationship. Abraham and Sarah are entering Egypt where Abraham is afraid he will be killed so his wife can be taken by another man. He tells Sarah to identify herself as his sister and not his wife. She is taken by Pharoah and remains a captive in the castle, awaiting the outcome of Abraham's lie.

The midrash recounts Sarah's confrontation with God on that night. "All that night, Sarah ... was saying 'God, Abraham needed your promise and I have functioned by belief. Abraham remains free and I am in captivity?' God answered: 'Sarah, everything I do, I do for you.' "

"AND YOU SHALL WRITE THEM ON YOUR DOORPOSTS..."

Grade 7 students at the Bathurst Campus of U.S.D.S. in Toronto got into the spirit of the new year recently by making and dedicating mezuzot for the school's classrooms and offices.

The Mother's Song

by Miriam Schneid-Ofseyer, 1952

I am the mother. From me he springs,
The source of joy and sufferings.
I, the mother, guard his way
From his birth till my last day.

I am the mother. With blood and heart
I make him a man that loves and builds,
Creates and fashions and sees beyond.
I am the mother. He is my child.

How can I hold my peace always
Whilst cries of horror tear my heart
When he is torn from me to war
And homeward he will come no more?

An end to silence and to tears!
I'll save him whilst my life endures;
I'll cry aloud to every nation,
To every mother of every man:

Lift up your hands!
Man's blood is one,
Do not despair -
We'll save him yet!

A living wall of all man's mothers,
Brown and white and black;
A towering wall which does not lack the yellow and the red.

Over every clash ascends
What is in common and transcends.

Millions, differing in all, yet share
The same great happiness - to bear
A living child, to be a mother,
And call a living son by name.

And millions will rise, millions of hands,
And these will be raised unto the skies,
Uplifted in oath:

Our sons to slaughter we will not give
The earth be our witness and heavens above.

Sometimes the Most Dignified Things are the Simplest.

Everyone has their own idea of what simple means. To us at The Simple Alternative it means good taste and common sense. Simplicity and dignity are the two hallmarks of Jewish funeral tradition. Expensive caskets and elaborate services are simply not part of this tradition. And, as many of our families tell us: sometimes the most dignified things in life are the simplest.

For complete details, ask for our Jewish information folder, or call our Jewish Funeral Consultant, Harvey Poch at (416) 441-1580.

Services, including transfer and shelter of the deceased, shemirah, tahara, linen shrouds, simple all-wood coffin, funeral coach, chapel or synagogue service—$1,950. Higher and lower cost options also available.

Palestinian Authority's status in Ottawa upgraded

By MIRIAM SOBEL
CJN Ottawa Correspondent

OTTAWA — Diplomatic relations between Canada and the Palestinian Authority warmed last week when Ottawa agreed to recognize Palestinian-issued travel documents and to raise the status of the PLO representative to Canada.

The changes were confirmed when Faisal Husseini, the minister in Yasser Arafat's Palestinian National Authority responsible for Jerusalem, met with Foreign Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet.

"This is a gesture of recognition of the political choices made by the PLO in favor of peace," said Rodney Moore, a spokesperson for Foreign Affairs.

For the first time, Palestinians will be able to visit Canada using three-year travel documents issued by the Palestinian National Authority. While not an official passport, which can only be issued by states, the documents will be recognized by Canadian immigration authorities.

Previously, Palestinians from the West Bank and Gaza had to travel under one-year Israeli papers.

The Palestinian documents are already recognized by France, Britain and the United States.

Baker Abdel Munem, the PLO representative to Canada, also learned last week that his status has been raised to that of "Delegate General."

The new title does not confer full diplomatic privileges or immunity, but is a diplomatic gesture towards the Palestinians.

Most European countries, the United States and Britain also give the PLO delegate general status.

Munem can begin flying the Palestinian flag from the Ottawa mission at any time, Moore added.

In August, the PLO reopened its office in Ottawa after a two year closure. Munem said at the time that one of his goals was to establish relations with diplomats and parliamentarians.

The return of a PLO representative to Canada was welcomed by the Israeli Embassy.

Munem could not be reached for comment about the changes to the official standing of his office.

Bonds, BB to honor Hamilton JCC president

CJN Correspondent

Harvey Waxman

HAMILTON — Hamilton State of Israel Bonds, in conjunction with B'nai Brith of Hamilton, will honor Harvey Waxman at its annual Very Special Breakfast Oct. 22 at 9:30 a.m. at Beth Jacob Synagogue.

Currently president of the Jewish Community Centre (JCC) for the second time, Waxman has been involved in the community since boyhood.

The son of Rochelle and the late "Yuke" Waxman, he took part in JCC childrens' and youth programs, became a board member in the mid-70s and has served on numerous committees.

Following a round robin baseball tournament in 1978, Waxman began organizing the Hamilton Jewish Men's Baseball League, which now boasts 200 players on the field every Sunday morning from May through September, and which earned him the title of Commissioner of Baseball.

In 1985, Waxman also organized the JCC Men's Basketball League.

He is a member of B'nai Brith and is involved in Jewish National Fund and United Jewish Appeal Campaigns.

Waxman's wife Shelley is manager of community resources at Shalom Village.

Guest speaker at the breakfast will be radio broadcaster, writer and commentator Barry Farber.

Breakfast co-chairs will be former Federation president Abe Szpirglas, David Burman of Viceroy Reading Lodge and David Walman of Hamilton Lodge.

"Things are terrible. I don't know how I'll survive."

Jewish welfare recipient

"Do not harden your heart and shut your hand against your needy brother."

Deuteronomy 15:7

In our Jewish community today, seeing is truly believing. Nearly 22,000 Toronto Jews live below the poverty line. That's one out of every seven. Almost 4,000 of them are children.

THE THREE YEAR VISION

In Israel, 750,000 people are poverty stricken. The number of reported cases of battered children has multiplied 20 times in a decade.

At UJA, through The Three Year Vision, we're looking ahead. Poverty and other urgent Jewish needs won't go away next year or the year after. Our community requires long term financial stability to continue dignifying lives.

This year, we asked you to join The Three Year Vision by pledging not only for 1996, but for the next two years as well. Together we've raised nearly $50 million so far.

We're on our way. But as long as we see Jews suffering, we'll never close our eyes.

When your canvasser calls, join The Three Year Vision or contact the UJA Hotline at (416) 631-5705.

Community celebrates newly acquired Torah

By REGINA ROSEN
Special to The CJN

KINGSTON, Ont. — There was joyous singing and dancing here earlier this month as the Jewish community took possession of a 90-year-old Russian Torah that was spirited out of the Soviet Union.

Beth Israel Congregation purchased the Torah from Rabbi Avraham Kubayov of Toronto, in a fundraising campaign led by Phil and Merle Koven.

The Torah fund campaign was initiated by synagogue board president Richard Kizell, in order to create an endowment fund for the perpetual care and conservation of all the synagogue's Torahs.

The recent Sunday ceremony brought the "new" Torah home and served to rededicate the congregation's existing six Torahs.

Outside the synagogue, Rabbi Steve Golden carried the Russian Torah as over 200 people followed, singing and dancing around the building.

Inside, the other Torahs were taken out, chassidic music was played by Amiel Bender of Montreal and the gathering danced with all seven Torahs, each passed from person to person.

Rabbi Golden read selected portions from Deuteronomy and Cantor Steve Chaiet of Ottawa performed, accompanied by Alfred Fisher, dean of the music department at Queen's University. The evening concluded with dinner and a musical presentation by Kingston's Talmud Torah.

כרטיסי כניסה לעולם של מעלה:

"נו, איך בילית את ראש השנה הראשון שלכם בגולת טורונטו?", שאלתי ישראלי שהגיע לא מכבר לתקופת השתלמות רפואית.

-"אל תשאל, אנחנו עדיין בשוק" הוא ענה לי אחרי שתיקה ממושכת.

-"חסרה לכם האווירה הישראלית, השירים היפים ברדיו"- ניסיתי לנחש,

-"לא , זה לא זה,"- הוא ענה.

"הפריע לכם שכולם מסביב ממשיכים ביום חול רגיל למרות ראש השנה"

- נתתי לעצמי עוד צ'אנס אחד.

-"לא, זה הרבה יותר גרוע," הוא אמר ולקח אוויר, "זה עניין כרטיסי הכניסה....אתה רואה שאני לא שומר מצוות מי יודע מה, אבל פעם בשנה, בימים הנוראים, אנחנו הולכים עם הילדים לבית הכנסת, שידעו לאן הם שייכים ומה זה ספר תורה ושופר, וכל הדברים האלה. אז הלכנו בדחילו ורחימו לבית הכנסת בשכונה שלנו. איך שאנחנו נכנסים לבית הכנסת ניגש אלינו איש ושואל אם יש לנו כרטיסי כניסה. ממש חטפתי שוק - כרטיסי כניסה לבית הכנסת?!"

אחד פוגש את החבר שלו ברחוב ורואה שהוא ירד במשקל ב - 20 ק"ג. הוא שואל אותו איך הוא עשה את זה. "הלכתי לרופא, נתן לי כדור, ובלילה הופיעו בחלומי בריזיזט ברדז, סינדי קרופורד וחברותיהן והזעתי, הזעתי וירדתי 20 ק"ג". מהחבר לרופא ומקבל כדור גם הוא. לוקח אותו לפני השינה והינה בחלומו מופיעות גולדה מאיר, בבה אידלסון ואינדירה גנדי. הוא מזיע, מזיע ומוריד 20 ק"ג. בבוקר , מעוצבן ומתוסכל הוא רץ למרפאה וצועק על המזכירה: "איך זה שהחבר שלי הוריד עשרים ק"ג עם בריזיזט בארדז ושו"ת ולי הבאתם את גולדה וחברותיה?!" עיינה המזכירה בתיקים והסבירה לו: " אין מה לעשות! אתה באת מקופת חולים והחבר שלך בא פרטי."

Free Loans association plans Vancouver meeting

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — More than 40 U.S. and Canadian cities will be represented by 75 delegates at the 14th annual convention of the Association of Hebrew Free Loans (AHFL) in North America to be held in Vancouver Oct. 22 to 24.

The aim of the AHFL, according to its bylaws, is to provide for the exchange of ideas, procedures and other information to assist member organizations "in furthering the Judaic concept of gemilut chessed — to aid worthy persons in becoming or remaining self-supporting, self-respecting members of their communities by aid of interest-free loans or services the individual may require."

Irving Levine of Pittsburgh, president of the AHFL, said in a phone interview that the 40 member-organizations in the United States have loans outstanding totalling $40 million. Losses average half of one per cent.

"The big banks come to us to find out how we keep our losses so low," Levine said, adding that the Pittsburgh organization is pretty well "the lender of last resort."

Shirley Barnett of Vancouver, chair of the convention and one of the founders of the Vancouver Hebrew Assistance Association (HAA), said 103 applications for loans were received last year in Vancouver, of which 68 were granted, for a total of $187,000.

In the 15 years of its operation, the HAA has received 771 applications and made 475 loans, ranging from $500 to $4,000. Bad debts during the past year totalled $1,200.

While the Vancouver HAA is marking its 15th anniversary it actually grew out of the Hebrew Free Loan Society and Achduth, founded 80 years ago.

Barnett, a former president of the Jewish Family Service (JFS) noted the increasing demand for help from the JFS from a growing population and decided to reinvigorate the old society. Enlisting the support of a number of community leaders, she helped reorganize the Hebrew Free Loan to become the HAA and sold $25 memberships to raise a substantial amount. The funds enabled the HAA to offer an improved free loan service.

Having started with 74 members, HAA now has about 175. In addition to memberships, the HAA has 22 "named loans" which for a minimum of $3,600 can be named for the donors. All named loans go into one treasury.

Barnett said the HAA's administrative costs total only $9,000 per year.

The society advised the VanCity credit union, one of the largest in Canada, Barnett said, on how to set up a community lending program for people who can't qualify for a loan from conventional sources. VanCity then modelled a new brochure on the subject on HAA material.

Pittsburgh's Irving Levine said his city's organization makes loans of up to $10,000 and asks for repayment within two years. As in Vancouver, most loan applicants are immigrants, although some loans are granted for educational purposes. Pittsburgh raises funds mainly through mail campaigns. Its loan operation is secular.

Neither Vancouver nor Pittsburgh receives federation funding.

Levine said that although there are only about 40 U.S. members in AHFL, a number of smaller centres have not yet joined. There are 200 free loan groups in Brooklyn, he said.

A community dinner will launch the gathering on Oct. 22 with guest speaker author and lecturer Danny Siegel.

The convention gets down to business the next morning, following welcoming addresses from Vancouver mayor Philip Owen and HAA president Mannie Druker.

The convention will be held at the Wall Centre Garden Hotel.

In addition to Vancouver, Canadian delegates are expected to report on their activities from Toronto, Victoria, Calgary and possibly Montreal, Ottawa and Hamilton.

Other speakers scheduled are Julie Blackman, of London, England; Prof. Eliezer Jaffe and Alvin Feldman, from Israel; and Dr. John Serry, from Australia.

New York shul inspires artist

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

Angel Orensanz

TORONTO — An old synagogue on New York's Lower East Side, which he bought for $500,000 in 1984, has inspired a Spanish Jewish sculptor to achieve new heights in his art.

And since Angel Orensanz, 49, has filled the vaulted Gothic interior of the synagogue with totem pole sculptures and is interested in primitive hieroglyphics, he is in Canada visiting sites with Indian writings and carvings.

Born in the village of Larves in Aragon, Spain, Orensanz says his life has changed since he and his brother, Al, bought the Anshei Chesed Synagogue on Norfolk Street, a four-storey wooden structure built in 1849 by German Reform Jews.

"My art has changed, it is more creative," he says.

The Torah from Anshei Chesed is now in the Hadassah Museum in Washington. Though it does not have regular services, the synagogue, said to be the third oldest in the United States, is still used for weddings, with a visiting rabbi performing the ceremony. It has also been the scene of theatrical performances and video shoots.

Many of Orensanz' sculptures are now in the synagogue balconies. Both Angel and his brother have apartments in the tower.

In Toronto one afternoon, Orensanz created an imposing sculpture at the Bata Shoe Museum, incorporating unusual footwear.

He was so struck by the beauty of the surroundings at Petroglyph Park near Peterborough that he created a large totemic sculpture of driftwood just outside the park, his work drawing a large crowd of tourists.

Totem poles

Orensanz has had exhibitions in many of the largest cities in the world and it was an important and remunerative commission to sculpt totem poles at the Marriott Hotel in Atlanta, Ga., that enabled him to purchase the synagogue with a huge mortgage.

The mortgage will be paid off in three years and though some developers may covet the site for residences, the sculptor himself wants it to be kept as an art showplace.

To that end, the Angel Orensanz Foundation was established in 1992. Anyone visiting New York is welcome to arrange to see the synagogue and its art by calling 212-529-7194.

Anshei Chesed merged with Temple Emanu-El uptown in the late 1880s and became a birthplace of the Reform movement. However, by 1975, after a succession of dwindling congregations, the synagogue on Norfolk Street, like many others in on the Lower East Side, was abandoned.

During the building boom of the following decade, the synagogue's deed passed through a series of owners, while its majestic interior suffered the ravages of vandals and decay.

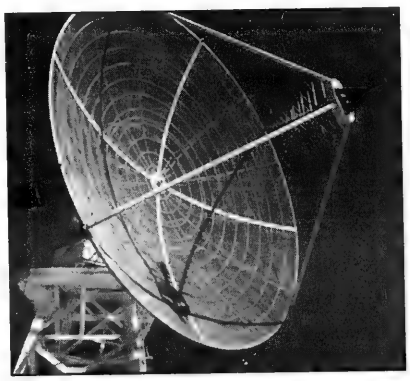
A $15 Billion Dream Came True...

One Investor At A Time.

Over the past 45 years, State of Israel Bonds has played a pivotal role in the success of Israel. And so have you. Over $15 billion of productive investment capital has been created through the firsthand participation of Israel's modern shareholder, Canadian Jews just like you. It is your commitment and emotional bond with the Holy Land that has allowed Israel to survive and prosper. And yet, even though Israel is a success beyond the dreams of its founders, some Jews still ask "...why does Israel still need my investment?"

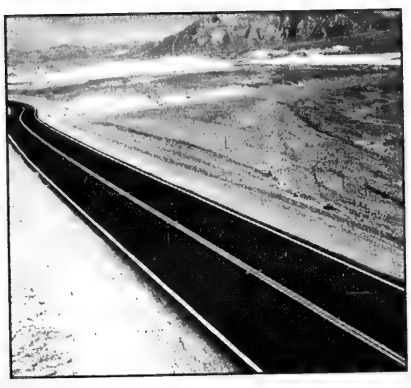
Well here's the simple truth. Time does not stand still. While thoughts of the Holy Land may evoke images of deserts and seas from biblical times, thousands of years ago, the success that is Israel today is the very image of a modern and vibrant world. A world economy rapidly expanding and a people building our future. Like any growing company, Israel's industrial expansion requires a steady and reliable source of investment to develop communications, energy and transportation - the lifeblood of a booming economy.

Every Jewish man, woman and child must experience the emotional bond of their truly unique partnership with Israel.



Telecommunications Bezeq, the state owned telecommunications corporation will invest a total of $2.94 billion in the next four years.

Hydro Electric Power The Israel Electric Corporation will double its electric capacity in the next eight years at a cost of $1 billion a year.



Trans Israel Highway The first $800 million stage will boost regional development projects, including new cities along its route.

The miracles of the past are clearly described in history books. But the miracles made possible by Jews around the world are monumental achievements taking place every day in Israel.

In 1994, Israel's economy grew at a rate of 6.8% which is faster than all of the OECD countries which averaged only 3.1%.

Israel's 1995 budget is $49 billion including a bold new $7.1 billion infrastructure program.

This is how Israel Bond investments are working. For Israel. For Jews everywhere. For you.

Shaar Shalom shags shul championship

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The king is dead; long live the king.

After two championships and three consecutive title game appearances, the boys from Beth Tikvah have finally relinquished their grip on the league crown of the Inter-Synagogue Baseball League.

A new champion, Shaar Shalom, came out of left field to claim the title. In the topsy-turvey season that was recenty concluded, Beth Tikvah racked up a 10-1 record before being eliminated in an early playoff round by a "B" team from Adath Israel. (An "A" team had a better record.)

Loaded for bear

It was the fourth year in a row the two synagogues squared off in the playoffs, but in previous years the league title was on the line.

This time, Adath Israel "B" advanced to the final against Shaar Shalom, which had amassed a 9-2 regular season record, its best in years, said Stephen Baird, Shaar Shalom co-captain.

Playing a nine-inning, three-pitch game in which the pitcher throws to members of his own team, Shaar Shalom jumped into a 4-3 first inning lead in a one-game final at Grandview Park.

But in a game which puts a premium on hitting and fielding, and in which double figure scores are not unusual, a one-run lead can evaporate as quickly as the Boston Red Sox' playoff hopes.

Shaar Shalom, which never trailed, added to its lead with a couple of five-run innings and were leading 17-12 going into the eighth frame.

That's when Adath Israel's fielding fell apart and allowed numerous infield singles, triggering a nine-run Shaar Shalom barrage. The ninth inning was blanked and Shaar Shalom went on to win 26-12.

Shaar Shalom was confident going into the final, having beaten the same Adath Israel squad during the regular season, Baird said.

"We went into the final loaded for bear. We weren't going to take survivors. It wasn't relaxed," he said.

In fact, Shaar Shalom was expecting it would have to confront Beth Tikvah, which was aiming for a championship three-peat, in the final. But last year's champs were eliminated by Adath Israel "B" in an early playoff game, and the "B" squad went on to register another upset when it beat the synagogue's "A" team to get to the final.

"I was looking forward to playing Beth Tikvah," said Baird. "They were our nemesis."

Nevertheless, Shaar Shalom is the new champion of the 14-team circuit.

The Inter-Synagogue Baseball League was founded in 1987 to provide competitive baseball to the members of the city's synagogues and temples. The league includes teams from Conservative and Reform synagogues. Shaar Shalom also fielded two teams.

Registered Retirement Income Funds (RRIFs) are the mirror image of Registered Retirement Savings Plans (RRSPs). Instead of contributing money, you receive regular payments.

It's a simple administrative procedure to convert some or all of your RRSPs into a RRIF. In fact, a mutual fund RRSP can simply be transferred "as is" into a mutual fund RRIF. You don't need to worry about selling units — perhaps when the market is down — to generate cash for a RRIF deposit.

Mutual funds are ideal RRIF investments for other reasons, too:

Inflation-protection. With a balanced selection of conservative and growth-oriented funds, you have the potential to achieve returns that will keep you ahead of the rising cost of living.

Flexibility. With mutual funds in your RRIF, you can set up a payment schedule to suit your current needs. You can choose the mandatory minimum payments set by the government, or determine your own higher level of income.

Diversification. Up to 20% of your RRIF can be held in foreign content funds, and you can choose a mix of equity and income funds.

Liquidity. Since mutual fund units can be redeemed at any time, it is easy to convert portions of your investment into retirement income payments when you need them.

You must convert your RRSPs to a RRIF or some other type of retirement income by December 31 of the year in which you turn 71.

Hadassah-WIZO Bazaar — a Toronto tradition for 71 years

Toronto Hadassah-WIZO Bazaar '95 revenues will be allocated toward MEDICAL SERVICES in Israel. It supports two of the finest hospitals in Israel, the Assaf Harofeh Hospital near Tel Aviv and the Hadassah Medical Centre in Jerusalem.

The Assaf Harofeh Hospital serves a population of over 350,000 and is affiliated with the Sachler School of Medicine at Tel Aviv University. Since 1953, Canadian Hadassah-WIZO has played an integral role in the support of Assaf Harofeh Hospital. Over the years, we have sponsored many facilities including the Mirial Small School of Nursing, the Cecily Peters Medical Diagnostic Imaging Centre, the Ophthal-mology Department, and its newest project, the creation of a very specialized Vascular Surgery Unit.

The Hadassah Medical Centre in Jerusalem consists of two University hospitals, a community health centre and a variety of outreach services. The hospital serves as a referral centre for tertiary and last resort care and is a leading, teaching and research facility, as well as a pioneer in new medical specialties. Canadian Hadassah-WIZO's first project was the Scandiplan Computer made in Sweden, a three-dimensional Cancer Radiation Treatment System. The newest project is the Human Umbilical Cord Blood Bank and Registry. This field is critical in auto-immune diseases, among them Multiple Sclerosis, Juvenile Diabetes and Rheumatoid Arthritis.

Jewish Singles Registry ... A Canadian Sensation

Are you single and still having trouble meeting other Jewish singles? If so, then it's time to take matters into your own hands and join Canada's premier dating service. The Jewish Singles Registry has been responsible for hundreds of marriages in Montreal, Toronto, and Ottawa, and with close to 3,000 members, this growing network continues to offer an exciting, simple, and enjoyable way for Jewish singles to meet.

Another Registry Marriage

Thanks in part to the combined efforts of Registry staff members in both Montreal and Toronto, J.S.R. is excited to report that another couple has recently tied the knot. A gentleman from Western Canada registered with the Toronto office, and on his first visit to Toronto was immediately attracted to one of the Montreal members whose profile also happened to be in the Toronto book. She agreed to meet with him, and he flew to Montreal to see her. Less than a year later she was saying yes again, but this time to a marriage proposal. All in all the Jewish Singles Registry network is responsible for hundreds of marriages and relationships, and thousands of first dates.

No Blind Dates

What makes the J.S.R. concept so special is its simple approach to dating. Members get to select for themselves who they would like to go out with by reviewing comprehensive biography/-profiles and photographs. This enables J.S.R. members to make informed and quality dating choices. No blind dates here! A constant flow of new registrants means that there are always new members to choose from.

Jewish Continuity

Jewish continuity represents the newest buzz words in our community today. Decreasing the rate of intermarriage and assimilation is not an easy task, nonetheless the Jewish Singles Registry continues to do its part. Each week hundreds of phone numbers are exchanged and new relationships formed. The major challenge however, is to see that the Jewish community grows in numbers. J.S.R. takes pride in the fact that close to 100 children have been born to J.S.R. alumni, thus increasing the Jewish population throughout Canada.

Contacting the J.S.R.

If you are single and want to meet other Jewish singles it's not going to happen by itself. Here is your chance to take the initiative and do something about it! With hundreds of files at your fingertips you get to preview and see what the other person is all about before any phone call ever takes place. It's fast, simple, and fun.

Contacting J.S.R. is as easy as picking up your phone and calling them right now. Both daytime and evening appointments are available. If for any reason you cannot reach them on your first try, simply leave them a message, and they will return the call at your convenience. It's that simple! The phone numbers are (Montreal) 514-937-2049, (Toronto) 416-398-7068, (Ottawa) 613-591-6544.

The Dating Game

90's Style

Unlike any other dating service, The Registry offers an unlimited number of introductions that you alone select from our extensive bio/photo library.

Call today, because if you're looking for the "right one," The Jewish Singles Registry is it.

Israel begins implementing Interim Agreement

CJN News Services

JERUSALEM — Israel began implementing its latest accord with the Palestinians last week, freeing close to 900 Palestinian prisoners.

But the first steps toward expanding Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank were not without dispute.

The Interim Agreement, which calls for the phased release of most Palestinians in Israeli jails and for the immediate release of all female prisoners, ran into a snag last week when President Ezer Weizman refused to shorten the sentences of two of the 27 female prisoners scheduled for release.

Weizman said he would stick to an earlier pledge not to let any prisoner with Israeli blood on his or her hands go free.

Two other female prisoners were refused release last week by Maj.-Gen. Ilan Biran, the commander in charge of an area that includes the West Bank.

Israel's refusal to release the four women prompted Ahmed Tibi, an adviser to PLO leader Yasser Arafat, to petition Israel's High Court of Justice.

Tibi argued that since the release of all female prisoners was part of the Interim Agreement, Weizman had acted beyond his authority in refusing to pardon the female inmates.

As a result of the dispute, only one of the 27 female prisoners was released last Sunday. She had been sentenced to seven years in jail for attempting to stab an Israeli soldier.

The remaining 22 female prisoners eligible for release vowed to stay in jail until the four who were denied their freedom were also released.

Nevertheless, despite the threat not to accept their release from prison unless Israel freed all female inmates, the vast majority of male prisoners defied the Palestinian leadership and left, rather than comply with what their leaders thought would be an effective political tool.

Of the 900 Palestinian prisoners released last week, some 500 had been convicted of committing security offenses against Israel.

The security prisoners were set free after signing statements pledging that they would refrain from terrorist activities.

Those prisoners who had been jailed for criminal offenses were also freed, after they signed pledges that they would not take part in any further criminal activities.

The releases were delayed by several hours, after Palestinian officials demanded that some of the prisoners be handed over directly to the Palestinian Authority.

Hisham Abdel Razek, a Palestinian negotiator on the prisoner issue, said Palestinian officials had wanted to review their files to decide whether they should be set free or be put in PLO-run jails.

Though they were free to go, some 84 of the criminal inmates remained in jail after no one from the PA came to pick them up, Army Radio reported.

Under the Oslo 2 agreement, Israel must release prisoners in three stages: one week following the signing of the accord; a second wave before elections to the Palestinian Council (expected in either January or April 1996); and a third during final-status talks, due to begin in May.

Sudan's Muslim Brotherhood won't rein in Hamas

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

KHARTOUM — The leadership of the Muslim Brotherhood in this Sudanese capital says it will not order the military wing of Hamas to halt acts of terrorism against Israel.

But leaders of the Brotherhood say they will consider a truce with the Palestinian Authority, according to PA sources in Gaza.

The Brotherhood is also allowing Hamas in Gaza to continue its dialogue with the PA on matters of common interest, but not to pursue a political agreement.

It has ordered Hamas not to issue any public statement suggesting it has changed its stand towards jihad (holy war) in any way.

Two Gaza Hamas delegates to Khartoum told the Brotherhood leadership that Hamas activities are endangering the organization, including its educational and social welfare infrastructure.

Among other topics raised was the possibility that Hamas could become a political party — a question that also applies to Jordan but about which there is no apparent consensus.

PA sources said they do not expect the Muslim Brotherhood to allow Hamas to reach an agreement with the authority. In fact, the sources say, the PA is working to heighten differences between the Hamas leadership within the territories and abroad.

Mahmoud Zahar, a Hamas leader who was freed from prison on Sunday, told the Associated Press last Wednesday that Hamas and the PA have never been closer to an agreement.

"We are looking forward to a new era in the relationship between Hamas and the PA," he added.

Col. Jibril Rajoub, head of the PLO's Preventive Security, said he expects an agreement to be finalized before Palestinian troops begin deploying in the West Bank later this month.

"These people [Hamas] are patriots and I don't expect them to carry out any acts, including military acts, that will hurt Palestinian interests," Rajoub said.

"We will have to weigh the benefits and drawbacks," said Zahar. "If we are able to achieve our aims without violence, we will do it.

"Violence is a method, it's not an aim."

Zahar, who advocates creating a Hamas political party, stressed that a decision to use restraint would not conflict with the goals of the movement.

"We will not recognize Israel, but we can have a cease-fire with Israel for days, months, years. We can use weapons against Israel and we can stop using weapons."

Enormous obstacles block Syria peace

MIDEAST ANALYSIS

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

At a ceremony in Washington last month marking the signing of the second phase of the Oslo agreement on Palestinian autonomy, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin urged Syria to join Israel and the PLO in moving the peace process forward.

But Syria, which condemned the accord as a Palestinian "capitulation" to Israel, did not respond to Israel's offer.

As if to underline Rabin's message, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres subsequently called on Syria (and Lebanon, its cowed protectorate) to "stop hesitating" and to "work day and night" for peace.

Once again, Syria remained silent. But several days later, at the United Nations, the Syrian foreign minister told U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher that negotiations with Israel would not resume unless Israel agrees to a complete withdrawal from the Golan Heights.

If nothing else, these episodes illustrate the enormous obstacles that still lie in the path of an accommodation between Syria and Israel. Indeed, Israel's fitful negotiations with Syria over the fate of the Golan are bogged down in a welter of major disagreements.

Such is the impasse that Rabin has expressed pessimism over the possibility of reaching an agreement before next year's Israeli election, while Peres has accused Syria of creating a crisis and voiced the lament that the two sides simply do not understand each other.

By all accounts, Syria is not optimistic either that a peace treaty is in the offing. Emerging from a recent meeting with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak in Cairo, Syrian President Hafez al-Assad said he doubted whether any progress would be made in the near future.

Israel and Syria last met in June, when their respective chiefs of staff, Gen. Amnon Lipkin-Shahak and Gen. Hikmat Shihabi, conferred in Washington over security arrangements on the Golan.

Lipkin-Shahak claimed that the discussions had been "fruitful," but admitted that the gaps "are still wide and deep." One of the chief sticking points at this juncture is Syria's refusal to countenance Israel's demand for early warning stations on the Golan following an Israeli withdrawal. Syria steadfastly maintains that aerial surveillance is sufficient.

Worse still, Syria angered Israel — and the United States — by reneging on a promise to hold follow-up discussions in Washington in July. Syria's obstreperous position was reminiscent of its unilateral decision last December to suspend talks with Israel after the first round of military negotiations failed.

Security issues are not the sole impediment to a treaty between Israel and Syria. The depth and timing of an Israeli pullout is in dispute, as is the degree of normalization.

Clearly, the Syrians are exceedingly stubborn negotiators. At a minimum, Assad expects a full Israeli withdrawal — not to the 1949 armistice lines but to the more topographically advantageous lines which it obtained on the eve of the Six Day War in 1967.

Furthermore, Syria has turned a deaf ear to Israel's demand that normal relations be established before the Israeli army vacates the Golan and abandons the settlements there.

In addition, Syria is balking at allowing Israel access to the Golan's water resources.

Even from a simple procedural point of view, the Syrians are obdurate. Assad has rejected face-to-face talks with Rabin, cryptically claiming that high-level negotiations are "a disease, not a cure."

Moreover, Syria has not acceded to Israel's repeated requests for confidence-building measures, nor has Syria reined in Palestinian groups, based in Damascus, which oppose the peace process and try to undermine it by means of terrorism and tension along Israel's Lebanese border.

Yet minor cracks have appeared in Syria's hard-line policy, prompting some observers to suggest that Syria may be rethinking its strategy toward Israel. Last month, a Syrian representative showed up at a trade fair in Tel Aviv, the first-ever such visit. Within days, the head of Syria's Jewish community, much depleted by emigration since 1992, was allowed to travel to Brussels for a World Jewish Congress meeting.

It is difficult to draw sweeping conclusions about Syrian intentions from these blips on the screen. But virtually all analysts in Israel believe that the Syrians — Israel's strongest military adversary — are theoretically ready to make peace with Israel.

As Assad ponders his next move, Rabin is painfully aware that the Knesset and the Israeli public remain seriously divided over the Golan question. That is why he has promised a referendum to clear the air. But before Rabin can do that, Israel and Syria must agree on the terms of a final settlement. For now, they are a long way from this objective.

Oct. 9

• Ha'aretz reported that 200 Israeli companies will participate in this year's international exhibition of media, office equipment and office mechanization, scheduled for the end of the month in Tel Aviv. This year's exhibition will place special emphasis on the Internet. Approximately 40,000 Israelis are connected to the Internet.

Oct. 10

• According to Peace Now, the government has begun construction on 1400 new housing units in the West Bank since the beginning of 1995. Most of the units are part of the greater Jerusalem area.

Oct. 11

• The world's first kosher McDonald's restaurant opened in the Harel shopping mall in Mevasseret Zion, outside Jerusalem. Additional kosher franchises are planned for Rehovot and Ra'anana.

Oct. 12

• The lead stories in the newspapers reported on the growing alarm in the security services about the possibility of an attack on Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres or another member of the government, by right-wing extremists who object violently to the peace process. The newspapers reported the special security detail charged with protecting government ministers has been beefed up.

Oct. 13

• Three IDF soldiers of the Golani Brigade killed in south Lebanon yesterday were buried. The three were Dror Brashi of Jerusalem, Reuven Ebgi of Ashdod and Aran Azoulai of Netanya. Six other soldiers were injured in the attack. The condition of one of them is described as very serious.

• Foreign Minister Peres criticized Syria for failing to curb terrorist activities in south Lebanon. Peace talks with the Syrians are frozen, he said.

JERUSALEM 3000 EVENTS

• Five thousand people were expected at the Conference of the International Christian Embassy.

• Three different marathon races, ranging from two to 21 kilometres, will be run in Jerusalem on Nov. 8. The deadline for registration is Nov.7. For information contact the nearest Israel Government Tourist Office.

Israel, U.S.A. & the World

Palestinian state predicted by the year 2000

[Cont'd. from page 1]

A Palestinian state, he claimed, will not damage Israel's vital interests. He said that some Israeli ministers already support the concept and that it is gaining ground in Israel.

"This taboo is no more there. People are ready to discuss this matter."

Born in Baghdad in 1940, Husseini is the scion of a prominent Palestinian family. His father, Abdel Qader, a military commander, was killed in the 1948 Arab-Israeli war. His son joined Fatah, the largest faction in the PLO, when it was founded in 1965.

In 1979, Husseini established the Arab Studies Society in East Jerusalem, which Israel closed from 1987 to 1991. Detained and/or arrested by Israel several times in the late 1980s and early 1990s, Husseini was one of the chief members of the Palestinian delegation at the Madrid peace talks in 1991.

Currently the highest-ranking Fatah official in East Jerusalem, Husseini makes his headquarters in Orient House, the centre of Palestinian political, social and civic activities on the West Bank.

Husseini said Israelis and Palestinians have embarked on the path of reconciliation. He estimated that the process will take less than 30 years, a figure recently cited by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

Husseini professed not to be concerned by the possibility that Benjamin Netanyahu — who opposes the Oslo process — may not recognize it should the Likud party win the 1996 Israeli election.

"This pact was signed with the Israeli government — not the Labor party, so they [Likud] must honor it. In the end, this agreement will be implemented."

Husseini said he completely concurs with Rabin's assessment that the peace process has reached "the point of no return. We cannot go back to the status quo ante."

Within its limited powers, the Palestine National Authority is doing its best to contain terrorism, he said.

"We want to build our state in an atmosphere of stability, but without security for both sides, there is no stability."

Husseini suggested that the Palestine National Authority can provide "full security" against terrorism if it is granted "full security control" by Israel.

"Give us full authority and I can give you full security."

Husseini urged Israel not to expropriate more land in and around Jerusalem. "This will have a very negative effect on the whole [peace] process."

Recently, Israel's housing minister hinted that more housing units may be built in Har Homa this year or next.

Speaking of Jewish settlers in the territories, Husseini said he had no problem with those who want to live there under Palestinian rule. "But no extra-territoriality for them! I don't want to see ghettos or [Palestinian] refugee camps on our land."

In a reference to Palestinian refugees displaced by wars, Husseini said he doesn't realistically expect all of them to return to their former homes in Israel. In the main, this problem can be solved through compensation payments, he noted.

In Ottawa, Husseini conferred with Foreign Minister Andre Ouellet and with officials of the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA).

During his visit, Canada upgraded the status of the PLO's new representative here, Baker Abdel Munem, to that of Delegate General, and agreed to recognize Palestinian travel documents.

CIDA, Munem told The CJN, will give the Palestine National Authority $100 million in aid over five years through the World Bank.

While in Ottawa, Husseini met privately with a Canadian Jewish Congress delegation headed by President Goldie Hershon and Ontario region chair Moshe Ronen.

Also attending the meeting were Ontario region Israel affairs chair Rabbi Dow Marmur, Ontario region executive director Manuel Prutschi, national executive director Jack Silverstone and director of communications Mike Cohen.

Quebecers' voting procedures explained

Forms asking for a specific return date are being enclosed with referendum ballots being mailed out since Oct. 4 to the approximately 14,000 out-of-province Quebecers worldwide who have registered to vote in the referendum, about half of whom are residing in other parts of Canada.

According to one press report, they also included 89 Quebecers who have registered from Israel.

Cote's announcement triggered charges that he was caving in to pressure from Pequistes growing increasingly worried about how many out-of-province Quebecers — thought to be mainly No voters — registered for the referendum.

Cote, however, insisted he made an honest mistake in not initially requiring an exact return date as Quebec law stipulates.

Both Jedwab and Casper Bloom, a Montreal lawyer presiding over a committee trying to make sure eligible out-of-province Quebecers vote in the referendum, said they should not be scared off by the last-minute requirement even if they do not know their exact return date.

Bloom advised such Quebecers to "put down their best estimate" since the return-date form should not be mailed back blank. Out-of-province referendum ballots (accompanied by return-date forms) must reach Cote's office by the time polls close in Quebec on referendum day, Oct. 30 at 8 p.m.

Jedwab suggested that in cases where the return date is not known, any date will probably do since the information is not verifiable. In fact, he said, the new requirement "invites people [who do not know their exact return date] to give an arbitrary date."

Jedwab declined to speculate on whether Cote's motive was to "deter" potential No voters, although he said that could be the unwarranted result.

Bloom, however, who has accused Cote of being a government "patsy" and of half-hearted efforts in notifying out-of-province Quebecers of their voting rights, refused to believe that Cote tightened the eligibility rules to correct an "oversight."

"It is clearly not an oversight," he said. "The pamphlet [issued by Cote's office] clearly says you do not have to fill in the date."

Both Jedwab and Bloom said including a planned date of return would never have sparked a controversy had the requirement been spelled out from the start of the process.

Hands-on approach key to fitness club's success

By RUTH SCHWEITZER
Special to The CJN

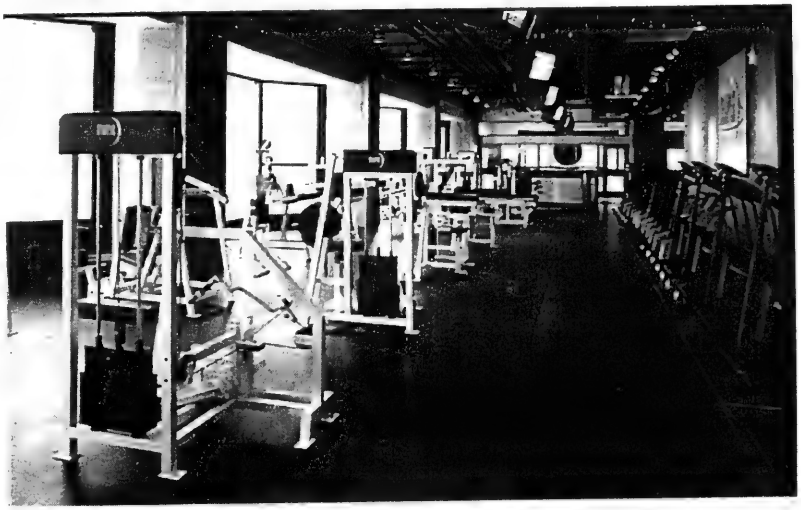
TORONTO — A student at the Community Academy of Toronto (CHAT) turned into a fitness buff when he lost 40 pounds in Grade 12.

After graduating from CHAT in 1986, Jason Kaiman went on to study economics and physical education at the University of Western Ontario. Once he got his BA, he became a fitness instructor at various Toronto clubs.

Kaiman, 28, along with a half dozen other investors, opened the Eclipse fitness club in the Yonge-Eglinton Centre last November.

They looked at fitness trends in the United States and "took the best" ideas from the clubs they visited in New York, Los Angeles, Boston and Chicago before they opened the business, he said.

The club offers its members the latest in exercise equipment, 40 different types of fitness classes and a fitness program adapted from a regimen that has reshaped the bodies of Demi Moore, Jane Fonda, Meg Ryan, Tom Hanks and Richard Gere.



The workout-room at the Eclipse fitness club at the Yonge-Eglinton Centre.

The program, created by the Sony Studios' athletic club, includes aerobic exercises, regular monitoring of one's heart rate and nutritional counselling.

"We were a test market to see if this program would really work on a commercial basis," Kaiman said. "And certainly it has."

The benefits of the regimen include increased muscle definition, cardiovascular endurance, flexibility and higher energy levels. However, most people join a fitness club to lose weight. One Eclipse member, Kaiman said, lost 20 pounds after 20 workouts in a four week period.

Club members can put on headphones and watch television while they are working out on the treadmills and a cafe is scheduled to open this fall.

The club's owners kept mirrors to a minimum so that members can concentrate on fitness rather than their looks.

"Mirrors in fitness clubs are used to analyze form," Kaiman explained. "In a free weight room you need to have a mirror, you need to see that you're using the proper form. In other clubs, the treadmills may be in front of the mirror. Well, why in heaven's name would you want to go running on a treadmill and look at yourself in the mirror or look at someone else who is maybe thinner than you?"

The club has so far attracted 800 members through word of mouth, "the best advertising in the fitness industry," said Kaiman. A seniors' program to draw the over 60 crowd starts in mid-September.

Eclipse is putting a cap on membership once it reaches 2,000 as the club does not want to jeopardize its status as an owner-operated company. Kaiman is a fitness instructor there, while other investors also have roles in the business.

This hands-on approach has been crucial to the club's success. "More than 2,000 people and we lose that hands-on, customer ideology."

Unlike other fitness clubs, Eclipse does not offer specials or discounts. A basic membership costs $75 a month, which is good value, he said.

The fitness industry in Canada got a bad name during the '70s and '80s because a number of fly-by-night operators went out of business, fleeing with their members' money, said Kaiman.

"We're definitely here to stay. We've been able to overcome those negatives and really focus on the positives."

Yiddish Laughter and Melodies: A wonderful evening of Yiddish entertainment is promised by three talented performers, Allen Farkas, Michael Lebovic and Stella Walker at the Workmen's Circle Auditorium, 471 Lawrence Ave. W., Toronto, Oct. 21, 8 p.m.

Farkas, a native of Montreal, and Lebovic, a transplanted New Yorker from Williamsburg, are well-known for their spirited presentations of Yiddish humor, drama, satire and song. Walker, a brilliant soprano, was highlighted at last summer's outdoor concert of Yiddish folk music in Toronto.

Presented by the Committee for Yiddish of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto and the Workmen's Circle. For tickets ($10 in advance), visit Lasting Impressions in Bathurst Manor Plaza or call 416-635-1145 or 416-633-4212.

Jewish Storytelling: Toronto's fourth annual festival of traditional and contemporary Jewish stories opens at the Leah Posluns Theatre, Oct. 28, 8 p.m., with Roslyn Bresnick-Perry, Alec Gelcer and Leslie Robbins.

A Sunday morning workshop (Oct. 29, 10 a.m.) at the North York Central Library, 5120 Yonge St., features Aubrey Davis telling A Basket for Baby Moses and Roslyn-Bresnick-Perry sharing Memories and Melodies, an examination of taped Yiddish songs, with sing-along. There is also a simultaneous children's concert.

Various tellers take the stage Sunday afternoon and evening, including Mayer Kirshenblatt, Judith Cohen, Leslie Robbins — and Michael Wex, who nearly caused this reporter to split a gut with laughter last year. A festival pass is $40; separate tickets available for individual events. 416-440-1330.

Bresnick-Perry performs Memories and Melodies in Yiddish at the Barbara Frum Library, North York, Oct. 26, 7.30 p.m. Tickets $15.

The Celluloid Jew: As in past seasons, the Toronto Jewish Film Foundation is offering an entertaining and informative course on Jewish film, featuring York film professor John Stuart Katz. In six sessions, participants examine such themes as the depiction of sons and daughters, assimilation, the family, Yiddishkeit, the Holocaust and humor. The films include Hollywood and foreign narratives, documentaries, personal films and experimental pieces.

The afternoon series begins Oct. 24, 2.30 to 5.30 p.m. and the evening series begins Oct. 25, 6.30 to 9.30 p.m. Bloor St. Y, 750 Spadina Rd., Toronto. Fee $65. 416-324-8600.

Building Bridges: Having recently concluded a two-year U.S. tour, this exhibition of some 45 works by six Israeli and six Palestinian artists comes to Toronto Oct.25 to Nov. 26. It highlights the theme of peace and the importance of culture and art in building bridges of understanding between people.

The exhibit is sponsored by the Consulate General of Israel in Toronto, the Zukerman Foundation and the Canadian Friends of Peace Now. Carrier Gallery, Columbus Centre, 901 Lawrence Ave. W., North York. Opening reception, Oct. 25, 6.30 p.m.

A lecture on Picasso

Norman Mailer & Picasso: Norman Mailer achieved instant fame in the late forties with his WWII novel The Naked and the Dead, and with many subsequent best-sellers. Having made a formidable mark on the modern American literary scene, he has retained his celebrity to this day. He is a Jewish man of letters, but not necessarily a man of Jewish letters. He's in town next week, lecturing on Picasso, the subject of his most recent book. Art Gallery of Ontario, Tanenbaum Centre of European Art, Oct. 24, 7 p.m.

Parisian Lunch: The Arts & Entertainment chapter of ORT presents celebrated author Erna Paris at a literary luncheon, speaking on her just-released book, The End of Days: A Story of Tolerance, Tyranny, and the Expulsion of the Jews from Spain. The $25 cost includes a $10 credit towards purchase of the book. Oct. 31, noon. Reservations, 416-787-0297.

In Brief: Buffalo's 11th annual Jewish Film Festival, Oct. 21 to 26, features the wonderful film Mina Tannenbaum, which highlighted Toronto's festival last spring. Other films include Journey to the South, Hidden Children, Genghis Cohn, Little Odessa and Bye Bye America. Screenings at Amherst Theatre, University Plaza. Information, 716-688-4033.

Rhonda Silver, a one-woman band known for her "fat, high-class" sound and her renditions of contemporary standards such as Night Moves, appears at Le Saint Tropez, 315 King St. W., Toronto, on Oct. 17, 18, 24 & 25. Reservations recommended. 416-591-3600.

Two instrumental klezmer music workshops, by Martin van de Ven, formally of the Flying Bulgar Klezmer Band, are offered for beginners and intermediates. 416-588-5486 or 416-538-1831.

Opening Oct. 20 at Toronto's Bloor St. Cinema, Les Patriotes (by director Eric Rochant) examines Israel's secret service, the Mossad, and provides "a fascinating look at power, seduction and the game of manipulation."

Travel Talk

The Jews of Finland: If you're Jewish, there are special religious questions associated with living in the Land of the Midnight Sun.

Evening services in Helsinki's Adath Israel Synagogue are conducted at a fixed time throughout the summer, when the sun doesn't set until very late, if at all. The havdalah ceremony that ends the Sabbath in religious homes, however, is sometimes conducted as late as 1:30 a.m. on Sunday, according to Dan Kantor, executive secretary of the Finnish Jewish community.

"In the north, a religious Jew would have a problem observing Shabbat, because there the sun doesn't set at all," he explains. "The important thing is to celebrate the Sabbath, not to watch the clock. If you keep the Sabbath for 26 or 27 hours, I think it's enough."

Ancestors of Finland's present 1,500-strong Jewish community understood the religious ramifications of keeping the Sabbath in northern latitudes. The first Jews to reach Finland arrived from the equally hyperborean country of Russia about 1809.

In that year, Finland became part of the Russian Empire after 700 years of Swedish domination. To protect their new territory, the Russians sent over some army troops. Included in the ranks were cantonists, Jewish boys of 12 and 13 years of age, forced to serve up to 25 years in the Russian army. By the time they were through, many had lost all contact with family in Russia and chose to stay in Finland. Some returned to Russia to find Jewish wives, then returned to settle permanently.

Each year, thousands of visitors admire the stylish sanctuary of Helsinki's only synagogue, which dates from 1906. Many also inspect the glass display case containing the historic wreath that Finnish president Marshall E.G. Mannerheim gave the Jewish community in 1944 in commemoration of the many Jewish soldiers in the Finnish army killed in battle.

"This is how Mannerheim showed the outside world the attitude of the Finnish government towards the Jewish question," Kantor says. "By coming to the synagogue and giving this wreath, he really declared that the Jews were equal citizens. In a way, it was a bold thing to do."

In the early part of WWII, Finland joined with Nazi Germany in fighting Russia. Many Jewish soldiers in the Finnish army found themselves in the unenviable position of fighting side by side with the Germans.

"The Germans wanted the Finns to hand over the Jews, but the Finns wouldn't," Kantor recounts. "The only Jews deported from Finland to the camps were eight Austrian refugees, and even that was without the permission of the government."

The Adath Israel synagogue is located at Malminkatu 26, Helsinki. Finland boasts one other synagogue. It's in the former capital of Turku, which boasts a Jewish community of several hundred.

Fashion in Philadelphia: From now until March 3, 1996, the National Museum of American Jewish History in Philadelphia features the exhibition, Becoming American Women: Clothing and the Jewish Immigrant Experience, 1880 to 1920. The exhibition focuses on dress and its power to transform immigrant Jewish women from "greenhorns" to Americans. 215-923-3811.

Jogging in Jerusalem: An international marathon has been planned for Nov. 8 to mark the celebration of Jerusalem's 3,000th anniversary. The Jerusalem Municipal Sports Authority invites competitors to participate in three races ranging from 2 to 21 kilometres. The larger race has an entry free of $50 (US).

Weather conditions in Jerusalem in November are ideal for running, with temperatures between 15 and 20 degrees and a slight chance of rain. Israel Government Tourist Office, 416-964-3784.

UJA-Federation Mission to Israel: Return air transportation (from Toronto) by El Al, five-star accommodation for eight nights, many meals, outstanding speakers and political personalities, and a chance to celebrate the City of David's 3,000th anniversary — all this and more for the competitive price of $1,996. Participants must be at least 18 years old and have contributed at least $250 to the UJA. Hindy Friedman, 416-636-1996.

Dear Ella,

I am a 30-year-old woman. I have always wanted to get married and raise a family. Having a family is a very important priority in my life. My problem is Jeffrey. We have been dating for three years. We have talked about getting married and raising a family together as though it were a fait accompli. So... where is my proposal? I have gone through many birthdays and special occasions when I was sure that Jeffrey was going to pop the question. He never did. Ella, do you think it would be terribly forward of me to do the popping? I am starting to feel pressured, as my biological clock is ticking away. The thought of asking Jeffrey to marry me is so foreign an idea, but what choice do I have? Do you think I would be backing Jeffrey into a corner? Any advice you could give me would be appreciated.

Tic Toc

Dear Tic Toc,

Jeffrey is feeling comfortable and secure in your relationship. He may not realize the urgency that you are feeling. You say you have discussed marriage and Jeffrey realizes that you want to have a family. Go ahead and ask Jeffrey to marry you. Your future is on the line. This is not a time to stand on formalities. If Jeffrey is not interested in getting married, you should find out sooner rather than later. If the two of you have love, trust and friendship going for you, it really doesn't matter who does the asking.

Readers may submit their questions to Ella at The CJN. But Ella is not a professional counsellor. She brings to the questions posed by readers her unique brand of earthy wisdom. Her advice is not a replacement for medical, legal or any other advice. For serious problems, consult a professional.

No avoiding it; Yes vote means 'goodbye' Canada

It is true that at one time, an English-speaking business class, some from Quebec, some from Ontario, some from the United States, dominated the Quebec economy, but this too is less true today than ever before. Quebec is stronger today than ever. Its business leadership is leading the way for Canada.

The challenges we face are common challenges. Together we face a global economy that requires teamwork and partnership for us to succeed. A shared challenge of creating good jobs for a new generation, of dealing with deficits and debts that are too large. A need to maintain a decent social order and to keep the sense of our having common obligations for "peace, order, and good government," despite the pressures of the world upon us.

You will hear now from your political leaders Lucien Bouchard and Jacques Parizeau that they have a plan for a new partnership with the rest of Canada after a Yes vote. I have not seen this plan, and we are not interested in breaking up the country first and then trying to figure out a way to put it back together again later.

It is always easier to negotiate with yourself in front of a mirror. There is no interest in the rest of the country to negotiate "on all fours" as one of your leaders has suggested. On the contrary, you are now holding the knife to your own throat. Take it away, and we can keep talking, as we always have.

There will be no shared passport, no common currency, with an independent Quebec. Quebec will become a foreign country, with no elected Members of Parliament in Ottawa. That is what Yes means. This has gone on long enough: Yes means "good-bye." It does not mean "see you again" in another deal which will only serve one party.

A short while ago, Parizeau came to Toronto and told us that if you voted Yes, Quebec would go away and stop bothering the rest of us. "The trips to the dentist" would end. I'm surprised he didn't offer us an all-day sucker at the same time. If you don't go to the dentist once in a while, you get cavities and your teeth will fall out.

Trips to the dentist

Negotiating is not a bother if it is done with mutual respect. It is a part of life, part of being Canadian. To try and escape it with one-sided moves is an illusion that will end up hurting us both. I do not want to see my country hurt by forces that sensible people can stop. I do not want to see Ontario hurt, nor Quebec. None of this is necessary or wise.

Canada is big enough for both of us. We have shared too much to give up now. Just say No.

Former premier Bob Rae is the leader of the New Democratic Party of Ontario.

Agony without ecstasy

By HAROLD M. WALLER
Special to The CJN

MONTREAL — Once again Quebec – and for that matter all of Canada – is experiencing the agony of a referendum on independence. It is painful to see a society dividing itself along so many lines of cleavage in pursuit of the chimerical notion that sovereignty, as its proponents insist on labelling it, can resolve the problems that Quebec faces.

Even more troubling is the extent to which Quebec society is dissipating its energies in a renewed struggle for independence, diverting scarce material and human resources away from the economic and social challenges that cry out for attention.

Perhaps the most disturbing aspect of the entire matter is the widely held view that a straightforward and direct question would stand no chance of receiving a majority of the votes. Why not ask the people whether Quebec should secede from Canada, thereby becoming an independent country? Surely that is precisely what this referendum is about.

But instead of honestly confronting the voters with the choice they must make, those responsible for planning this exercise have insisted on a convoluted question that obfuscates the issue rather than clarifies it. The resultant confusion leaves substantial portions of the electorate unsure as to what the consequences of a Yes vote would be in terms of Quebec's place within Canada, retention of Canadian passports and use of the currency.

Referendum Quebec

Of course the sowing of confusion is a deliberate strategy designed to make possible a Yes majority that would be beyond reach if an honest question were posed. In that sense, the leaders of the separatist camp show disdain for the voters, whom they apparently believe are incapable of seeing through this smokescreen.

On the other hand, if this is not a referendum on secession but only an attempt to establish a new relationship between Quebec and the rest of Canada, as some leaders of the camp de changement contend, then why not propose the terms of such a partnership, ask a question about that and leave the secession issue out of the campaign? Such an approach would demonstrate respect for the voters. Some might argue that such intellectual honesty is too much to expect of politicians, but that would be an exceedingly cynical view.

Any attempt to dissolve the political bonds that have connected one people to another successfully for a lengthy period of time represents a very serious undertaking. Moreover, as the representatives of the American people declared in 1776, "Prudence, indeed, will dictate that governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes." This is sound advice. If independence is sought, then the supporters of that cause carry a heavy burden of demonstrating that the maintenance of existing arrangements is intolerable, that those arrangements are so abusive as to

For Canada and Quebec

In four quickly passing days the people of Quebec will be answering either Yes or No to the following question:

"Do you agree that Quebec should become sovereign, after having made a formal offer to Canada for a new Economic and Political Partnership, within the scope of the Bill respecting the future of Quebec and of the agreement signed on June 12, 1995?"

In the pages of this newspaper we have criticized the language of the question and its drafters. The question is deliberately complicated and confusing, designed by its drafters to hide the bitter truth of a majority Yes vote: the break-up of Canada.

Editorial

What then, is there left to say that has not already been said? Who is left to be convinced who is not already convinced? Whose heart is left to be stirred by the conviction and the hope that Canada is worth preserving? For without Quebec, Canada ends. Is this the result that the majority of Quebecers intend?

A separated Quebec would shatter the geographic and political symmetry of the country. Once shattered, the remaining fragments would be reshaped ultimately according to the play of overwhelming, continental, north-south, economic forces.

Moreover, without the policy protection of the internationally-respected federal government of one of the largest countries on earth, the fragment that was the province of Quebec would find itself, eventually, less capable of asserting its linguistic, cultural uniqueness in an economically and politically reconfigured North America. How ironic, then! Time, life's great but occasionally cruel leveller, would cast the last and determining vote in the referendum.

WINNIPEG — A Manitoba man is seeking people who grew up in Camper or those with family stories and photos that would illustrate the plight of the town's early Jewish settlers.

Camper, about 160 kilometres north of Winnipeg, was a Jewish farm colony from 1909 to the mid-1920s.

John Plantz was raised there and his parents still live in what is left of the town. Plantz reports that he's located over 100 names of Jewish families who applied for land up to 1915.

Material may be sent to John Plantz, Box 1, Group 1, RR 1, Dugald, Man., R0E 0K0.

Seeking Jewish Writing

WINNIPEG — Prairie Fire, Manitoba's magazine of new writing, has announced a special issue of Jewish writing to be published in autumn, 1996.

The magazine will consider unsolicited submissions of short and (excerpted) long fiction, poetry, scenes from plays and personal essays.

Mail entries to: Prairie Fire, 423-100 Arthur St., Winnipeg, Man., R3B 1H1, along with an SASE and a brief biography. Deadline is Dec. 4, 1995.

Going to Disney World

WINNIPEG — The Chai Folk Ensemble is one of four Winnipeg folk arts groups scheduled to perform at Disney World during the week of Feb. 28 to March 6.

"This is another feather in our cap," said Casey Chisik, Chai's artistic director. The troupe performed in Mexico last spring.

The ensemble was invited to Disney World by a talent scout who saw a performance in August at Winnipeg's annual Folkorama festival. The group is slated for three performances a day.

ISRAEL

Israel's Headcount...

JERUSALEM — Israel's fifth census began last Thursday, as some 7,000 Central Bureau of Statistics workers began distributing questionnaires to some 1.5 million households and thousands of institutions throughout the country.

Chief statistician Prof. Yosef Yahav said the census would show a population that has increased by more than 1.5 million since the previous count in 1983.

...But Calls for Boycott

JERUSALEM — A coalition of right-wing groups has called for a boycott of the national census as an anti-government protest.

"Don't fill out the questionnaire until a government is elected that rules without PLO votes in the Knesset," read a letter sent out by the groups last Tuesday. "Remember, the future of our people in our land is not over as long as the people have not signed."

Medals Awarded

JERUSALEM — Diodoros I, the Greek Orthodox patriarch of Jerusalem, awarded the Golden Peace Prize to Prime Minister Rabin and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres at a ceremony last Tuesday on the Mount of Olives, despite pressure from Palestinians to cancel it.

Palestinians had insisted the ceremony not take place in eastern Jerusalem.

Earlier this month, Diodoros bestowed similar medals on Jordan's King Hussein and Crown Prince Hassan. He also intends to award the medal to PLO leader Yasser Arafat in Gaza later this year.

WORLD

Tributes to Gorbachev

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Former Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev was honored here recently by local Jewish community leaders and emigres from the former Soviet Union.

They gathered to thank Gorbachev for the policies he initiated in the late 1980s, allowing for mass Jewish emigration.

Gorbachev was in Louisville on Oct. 5 to accept a Grawemeyer Award for Ideas Improving World Order from the University of Louisville. The prize is $100,000.

Charges From Mufti

MOSCOW — The leader of Moscow's Muslim community has charged that the Russian Orthodox Church is riddled with anti-Semitism.

Mufti Ravil Gainutdin said the church is "infected with anti-Semitism" in an interview with Evreyskaya Gazeta, Moscow's biweekly Jewish newspaper.

Wurzweiler Rep Here

NEW YORK — A representative of Yeshiva University's Wurzweiler School of Social Work will be in Canada next month to meet students interested in enroling in the summer Block Education Plan and other programs.

Dr. Anita Rotman will be at Toronto's Park Plaza Hotel Nov. 5 to 15; at the Hotel du Fort in Montreal Nov. 16 to 19; at Calgary's Palisser Hotel on Nov. 20; and at the Chateau Laurier in Ottawa Nov. 21 and 22.

Anyone interested in setting up an appointment should contact the hotels.

Correction

In the heartfelt, moving Letter to a Separatist written by Bob Rae which appeared on the front page last week, we botched up the author's second paragraph. It should have read:

"We are not conquerors. There are none among us now. The battle for domination in North America is over. Behind us. You and I were not there among the foreign troops. Let's stop pretending we were. There is a history to be learned and respected. There is also a mythology from which we must awaken."

We apologize for the error.

Community watching referendum with concern

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Other than being overwhelmingly in support of the No vote, the mood of the Jewish community on the eve of the referendum is quite different from that in 1980.

"I don't see panic, but there is concern," said Frank Schlesinger, a lawyer who was Canadian Jewish Congress, Quebec chair in 1980.

He said he does not foresee an exodus of Jews from Quebec should sovereignty pass. "It's economics, not politics, on which people's decision to stay or leave will be hinged."

Robert Libman, former Equality Party leader and MNA, feels that if the Yes wins a "large number of Jews will give up on Quebec." However, he remains "cautiously optimistic" the No will win with 57 or 58 per cent.

But Libman, 35, admits the role of Bloc Quebecois leader Lucien Bouchard in the last few weeks has made him nervous.

"I hope the Quebec government will realize that to get the province back on track, separation has to be a thing of the past," he said.

"I can't conceive of or absorb a Yes vote," said Monty Berger, 77, a longtime community leader and public relations man, who recently published — in French and English — the book Lament for a Province: The Tragic Costs of Quebec's Flirtation with Separatism.

Jews, like most Quebecers, are "fed up" with the seemingly neverending discussion on the province's future, but no one should interpret that as apathy, he said.

The Liberal MNA for predominantly Jewish D'Arcy McGee riding, Lawrence Bergman, has used aggressive language in attacking sovereignty. Speaking in the National Assembly, he called separation "an irresponsible, sly, hare-brained project."

He fears that "the separation of Quebec from Canada will provoke responses we cannot today imagine but that tomorrow we may well live to regret."

Sheldon Hershon, a co-chair of the No committee in D'Arcy McGee, said Bouchard's greater role in the campaign has been a "wake-up call" to the community to not be complacent.

One community member excitedly looking forward to a Yes win is Ghila Sroka, a member of the national Yes committee.

She says she has been a sovereigntist for over 20 years because she is a Zionist. "My whole life I have believed in the right of the Jews to their own state and of the Palestinians to their state, so why should I not support the Quebecois in wanting to take their destiny in their own hands?"

Federalist Jews, she insists, have nothing to fear from sovereignty. "Their life is not going to change. They are free to stay here, if they want to build a country ... But I would ask them to stay at least a couple of years, just to see how capable we are of building it."

The argument that the Jewish community should have remained neutral on sovereignty makes some sense to Schlesinger. In 1980, Congress was firmly neutral and more narrowly defined "Jewish" issues.

By taking a position, Congress has compromised its apolitical, nonpartisan tradition and thereby risks losing credibility when it goes to government on other issues, he believes.

Current Congress Quebec chair Reisa Teitelbaum said Congress' policy is logical to her. "Over 90 per cent of our community is federalist; our position should be a loud and clear No."

One thing Quebec nationalists should not forget, as Berger writes in his book, is that "whatever the complaints of yesteryear, the current population of non-francophones want with all their might to work together with the French-speaking majority ... No matter whence and when they came, these Montrealers are as fiercely proud of their city and their province as any pure laine Quebecer."

'I was worried in 1980, too'

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — A decidedly unscientific straw poll of Jews about to say No to Quebec sovereignty for the second time in 15 years revealed an undivided view that Canada would still be around on Oct. 31.

But about half voiced concern that even if federalist forces win the battle, they could lose the war if the "Bouchard factor" makes the margin of victory less than decisive.

It was the "Bouchard factor," in fact, that prompted several of those asked to say they were more anxious about the sovereignty vote this time out.

"I wasn't concerned at all in 1980," recalled Eleanor Sevack, a 49-year-old homemaker.

"I'm less confident now because Mr. Parizeau had Mr. Bouchard take the lead."

Both Bouchard's charisma and the sympathy he gained during his near-fatal illness could appeal to Quebecers, "who are sentimental people," she said.

Joe Cohen, shopping in a neighborhood mall with his wife Rhea, also shared concerns over the influence Bouchard might wield, even if the No forces prevailed.

Joe, who is retired, felt "a little less sure" than in 1980. "Why don't the federalists speak up more?," he asked. "There was a better chance before Bouchard came in. I'm very nervous this time."

Although businessman Ben Freidman, 59, also thought Bouchard might "gain some points" for the sovereigntists by effectively taking over leadership of the Yes campaign, it won't be enough to take him over the top, he predicted.

"I'm not nervous. What's gonna be, will be. I live here and I'm staying here, even though I think the economy would suffer."

Imre Ban, 85, isn't more worried this year. "I was worried in 1980, too," he said. "It's the same thing this year. I don't like this Bouchard. I hope he does not win."

Gloria Jennings, a Quebec resident for 30 years, was one of the few interviewed who sounded a more optimistic note than 15 years ago.

"I know it's going to be a No," she said. "I'm less nervous now. If Rene Levesque didn't do it then, I can see no reason today why it will happen.

"Fifteen years ago, I could see why people wanted [separation]. But if you ask people now, they're better off than their fathers were."

Rally set for Oct. 29 to protest Branson closing

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — An outdoor rally on the hospital's parking lot to protest the closing of North York Branson Hospital is taking place Oct. 29, 2:30 p.m.

A total of 3,000 are expected to attend the rally. In case of inclement weather, marquees will provide shelter and free parking is available on four staff parking lots on the perimeter. The hospital is providing buses at certain pick-up points. Call 416-635-2525.

The Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto will make a submission to the District Health Council (DHC) Oct. 27 at Memorial Hall, North York City Hall, objecting to the closure. The hearing, open to the public, is scheduled from noon to 7 p.m.

For information on making a presentation call 416-222-6522, ext. 264. The council will allow five minute presentations and another five minutes for questions from council memmbers.

"Branson is too important to the Jewish community to lose," said Alan Sandler, chair, of federation's Community Planning and Allocations department. "Branson not only serves the highest patient case load of any Metro hospital, but serves more than 25,000 people over the age of 65, most of them Jewish.

"They're vulnerable and they neeed a neighborhood hospital within quick reach. For them, the extra time it takes to reach another hospital during an emergency could mean the difference between life and death."

Signs proclaiming "Save the Hospital" have sprouted on lawns in the area.

A federation press release said Jewish patients receive 70 per cent of the hospital's critical care for heart attacks and strokes and 60 per cent of x-ray, ultrasound, CT scans and nuclear medicine examinations. In addition, 80 per cent of patients treated for abdominal bleeding and respiratory problems are Jewish as are 65 per cent of the doctors on staff.

A report to the DHC by an NDP-appointed committee recommended that Branson be closed and merged with York-Finch Hospital, except for an ambulatory care facility and day surgery. The report called for $50 million to be spent on York-Finch to make the merger feasible and its timetable proposed that the final merger, and closing of Branson, take place in 1999. Sandler noted Branson's easy access, compared to York-Finch, for Sabbath observant hospital visitors and Branson's special services to meet Jewish religious requirements. The hospital, for example, provides a separate room for someone to keep watch over a patient who has died and a sleeping area for religious physicians on call who want to avoid Sabbath travel.

The report said the closing of seven hospitals in the Metro area would save the provincial government $5 billion over five years.

Gallop expects the DHC's decision on the report will be delivered to the government by Nov. 15 and that the government will act on it by the end of the year.

Monte Kwinter, the Liberal member for Wilson Heights, has promised his support to the hospital which is in his riding, Gallop said. Hospital board members have met with Charles Harnick, attorney general in the Conservative government, who represents the adjoining riding of Willowdale, who gave them a sympathetic hearing, expressed real concern, but made no commitments.

A fundraising night to help Branson fight the proposed closing is being organized at Ford Centre for the Performing Arts Nov. 30 by Ken Bodenstein.

Rumors fly at Cummer Lodge

TORONTO — "It's like taking your mother and putting her out on the street," said Margaret Bryce, coordinator of the Toronto Mayor's Committee on Aging, refering to a proposal by Metro to close four homes for the aged including Cummer Lodge, in the wake of provincial government cuts.

"The residents of Cummer are up and down, the place is flying with rumors and some people are in tears," said Carl Rees, a volunteer, whose mother is in Cummer. About one-third of the 420 residents of Cummer Lodge are Jewish.

The Mayor's Committee told the Metro financial priorities committee Oct. 20 that it makes no sense to evict about 1,300 residents from homes for the aged, when there is only a one per cent vacancy rate in chronic care hospitals which have a waiting list of 6,048.

"As far as these elderly people coming back to their own homes, many have no homes to go to, and what are you going to do with a 95-year-old?" asked Bryce.

North York Mayor Mel Lastman said he suspects Metro is plotting to sell off Cummer Lodge and renege on a $45-million project to renovate it.

in recognition of excellence in communal leadership and dedicated public service

Sunday, November 26, 1995 at The Sheraton Centre, Toronto

Reception: 5:00 p.m. Dinner: 6:00 p.m.

Tickets to the Dinner are $107 per person with a minimum contribution of $360 (for which a tax receipt will be issued)

Campaign and Dinner Co-Chairs:
Sheila Engel and Jack Gwartz

A special project will be initiated on the occasion of the Negev Dinner in tribute to Leslie L. Dan, to be known as THE DAN FAMILY ARAVA DEVELOPMENT PROJECT, dedicated to the loving memory of the late Judith Dan.

The reclamation project to be undertaken in the Arava, a barren and wilderness area of the eastern Negev Desert, running south from the Dead Sea down along the border with Jordan to Eilat, will transform a very old dream into a new reality. Fertile agricultural land supporting an enhanced population base and light industry will blossom forth. For JNF, this is a long-time wish, a "back to the basics" Zionist approach to making the Negev "green" and productive. A rejuvenated Arava!

With the support of the Toronto community, JNF will act to realize the vision of the prophet: "And the desert will become a paradise and the wilderness a garden of the Lord."

Jay Feinberg's doctors 'cautiously optimistic'

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Doctors at the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Centre are "cautiously optimistic" about the condition of bone marrow transplant recipient Jay Feinberg, reports Jay's mother Arlene.

While Jay received his transplant on July 28, and was allowed to return to the family's rented apartment in Seattle, last week he was re-hospitalized for the third time.

An exhausted Arlene Feinberg said that although the transplant has been accepted by her son's body, he appears to have developed chronic graft-vs-host disease, a not uncommon reaction to the transplant.

Doctors are working hard to adjust his medication, a process which is not only medically complex, but is very difficult for the body to contend with.

"Bone marrow transplants are the most difficult kind of transplant," Arlene Feinberg said. "It's a long, slow process."

Jay receives red blood cells and platelets regularly, as well as physiotherapy to build up his strength, mainly as an outpatient.

He has been able to go out for walks around the city, she said.

Although the setbacks are discouraging for him, she said that he is generally in pretty good spirits.

"He is determined to get through this, as we are," she said.

He is still getting a good deal of mail, including from Canada, which, she said, "lights up his face."

In a chilling postscript, she said that she has heard suggestions that the increasing incidences of cancer have been blamed partly on environmental causes, citing cases of seven cancer patients who had lived in one apartment building in New York City.

The family had hoped to be home for Thanksgiving, towards the end of November, and they are still fairly hopeful that this will be possible.

Letters or cards can be sent to Jay Feinberg at 1101 Seneca St., Apt. 1501, Seattle, WA. 98101. U.S.A.

Tanenbaum donates $10M

TORONTO — The University of Toronto and four affiliated hospitals will benefit from a $10 million private gift earmarked for biomedical research.

Anne Tanenbaum, 85, presented the gift last week to establish in perpetuity the Anne and Max Tanenbaum Chair Program in Biomedical Research.

Through the program, cooperative research chairs in molecular medicine and neuroscience will be created at the U of T faculty of medicine, Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care, Mount Sinai Hospital, the Hospital for Sick Children and the Toronto Hospital. Earlier gifts by Tanenbaum established research chairs at Baycrest and Mount Sinai. The five new chairs are expected to be operational by mid-1996.

Tanenbaum's decision to fund the program resulted from personal experience. After her late husband Max suffered a stroke, Anne found herself sitting in a lounge in the intensive care unit of Mount Sinai Hospital.

A stranger, not knowing that Tanenbaum and her philanthropist husband had funded the lounge, commented on the wonderful effect their gift had had on her personally. It was then that Tanenbaum, the matriarch of a family that now includes 11 great-grandchildren, began contemplating contributing more to medical research so that others would also benefit.

Anne Tanenbaum

At the Hospital for Sick Children, research at the Centre for Genome Studies, now under development, will focus on seeking genes for use in gene therapy treatments and gaining a better understanding of how these genes function or cause disease when they fail to function properly.

The eventual result will be more effective treatment for children's diseases, said Dr. Manuel Buchwald, acting director of the hospital's Research Institute.

At the other end of the age spectrum, researchers at Baycrest's Rotman Research Institute will concentrate on studying diseases of the brain, such as Alzheimer's disease.

ATTENTION HOLOCAUST SURVIVORS & THEIR FAMILIES

The Swiss Bank Association has recently made an announcement concerning unclaimed bank accounts which may belong to Holocaust Survivors or their families. 'Daughter of Zion' to launch Hadassah bazaar

99-year-old attended first event as a teen

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — At 99, Minn Sandler is likely the oldest living Hadassah-WIZO member and certainly the only one to have worked at the first Toronto bazaar held by the Zionist organization some eight decades ago.

On Wednesday of this week, she cuts the ribbon to the 71st Hadassah-WIZO bazaar along with Toronto mayor Barbara Hall.

When Sandler (then Levine) was a teenager and the bazaar was in its infancy, her father and uncle, both cabinetmakers, prepared the booths for the event held at Central Palace Hall on Elm Street.

Minn Sandler

Back then, she belonged to the Nordau Girls chapter, a group of teenagers who met in each other's homes. The group known as Daughters of Zion pre-dated Hadassah in Toronto.

A life member for many years, Sandler is a native of Birmingham, England who moved to Toronto with her parents and four younger siblings at age 10. A clever student, she reluctantly left school at age 14 to supplement the family income.

After a week on the job at Dominion Feather and Flower (manufacturers of trim for women's hats), she was promoted to forelady and her weekly salary was doubled to six dollars, she recalled during a recent interview at her Baycrest Terrace apartment.

Before her marriage to Samuel (Chick) Sandler in 1919, she also worked at Owens and Elms, an exclusive shoe store where she was the only female salesperson.

"Even Lady Eaton came to buy her shoes there, but I didn't wait on her. The owners did. A good pair of shoes at that time probably cost nine or ten dollars."

Sandler's quick mind is not preoccupied with the past, however. Picking through boxes in the apartment into which she moved only a week before, Sandler finds the supplies she needs for intricate French beadwork. "Those are seed pearls," she says, indicating a sample floral spray of her own design.

A self-taught artist and needlework expert, she has created hand-crocheted afghans and embroidered samplers for her children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

Her latest project is a gift for a great-granddaughter who was married recently. She has just finished embroidering eight napkins and is working on a matching tablecloth with a detailed floral design.

"Busy hands all the time. I never get bored," Sandler says, adding that she has to use a good, bright light for close work now. A touch of arthritis "doesn't seem to interfere."

The matriarch of a close family, Sandler and her husband operated Minn Sandler Antiques on Eglinton Avenue for 20 years. She closed the store shortly after his death in the late 1960s.

Sandler's daughter, Mildred Ulster, is a member of Hadassah's Degania chapter. A son, Eddie, died of multiple sclerosis in 1960.

Sandler credits her own longevity to her sense of humor and the love of her family, with whom she will celebrate her 100th birthday on December 29.

Her diet is probably a longevity factor too. "I have regular meals. I squeeze fresh orange juice. I cooked oatmeal this morning. I have a banana every morning, and I eat a lot of fruit. I really don't feel 99. I think I've always had a lot of energy."

50th Anniversary

After World War II, the victorious nations attempted to create a form of order out of the unimaginably evil chaos that Germany and Japan had wrought upon the world. Thus, on Oct. 24, 1945, the governments of 50 different countries agreed to the provisions of a multilateral treaty dealing with a broad range of reciprocal duties and obligations on matters of security, economic and social development. They revived the underlying principle, if not the structural organization, of the failed League of Nations, that a mechanism of collective security among peace-loving states was vital for the maintenance of international peace and security. The result was the United Nations.

We hold no brief for the UN. For more than 20 years, starting after the Six Day War in 1967, it was nothing more than a dark, sinister forum for the vilest, basest anti-Semitism orchestrated by the Soviets and joined in by the Arab states. Its lowest point was surely during the period when Kurt Waldheim, bearer of a secret Nazi past, held the post of Secretary-General. Nor has it distinguished itself, even after the collapse of the Iron Curtain Empire during the ongoing crisis in the Balkans.

However, we must not forget the substantial good that was achieved for the Jewish people and for the world on Nov. 29, 1947, at a time when "Palestinian" meant Jew, to partition the already-partitioned Palestine into a Jewish and Arab state.

Thus, as a reminder of all the good that was intended, though so little subsequently achieved, we reproduce the aims of the organization as expressed in the preamble of its Charter.

"We the peoples of the United Nations determined:

To save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and

To reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and

To establish conditions under which justice and respect to the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and

To promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom."

In an ideal world, they would be more than part of a preamble; they would be a way of life.

Your neighbor's honor

People who have, should be neither smug nor self-righteous with people who have not. But last week in the Ontario Legislature, in a bewildering example of behavior to the contrary, the Minister of Community and Social Services suggested to welfare recipients how and what they might eat to literally survive the reductions in their monthly allowances. He made available his shopping guide for the poor and needy of low budget food items costing under $100 per month. In doing so he was being smug, self-righteous and insulting.

The accuracy of the minister's list was irrelevant, as was its substantive, nutritional merit. What was relevant was the sight of the minister suggesting to thousands and thousands of Ontarians the detailed items for their monthly menu. Although he meant no offense, offense was the result. He demonstrated insensitivity to the feelings and sensibilities of the unfortunate people whose needs he is sworn to assist. Poverty is suffering enough. To its pain we should not add embarrassment or indignity.

As our sages have taught, the dignity and honor of our neighbor should be as precious and dear to us as our own. This is a lesson the minister should learn.

WISDOM OF THE AGES:

Words should be weighed, not counted.

'No' supporters are not zealots

I have read your Page 1 articles on the Quebec referendum now for the last few weeks and must respond to their general thrust. Irving Abella on Oct. 5 says that "Canada is a large nation. Our task is to make it a great one." Any country that is repeatedly rated as one of the top five best countries in the world is a great country in my estimation.

Linda Adams on Oct. 12 mentions the language police and the lack of freedom of expression in Quebec, indicating the lack of one very important right that was removed. I object to her calling persons who wish to see a positive result zealots. If you have been paying a blackmailer more than 50 years and he says he wishes to go away and stop requiring the annual payments and you say "G-d speed," I would call that pragmatism not zealotry.

We have had the neverendum for about 200 years. Why should it stop if there is a Yes or No? Why not let the neverendum continue in the new country of Quebec? On the other hand, she says that Canada is decent, civil, equal, fair and tolerant. I have found most of Canada just that, but not to any equal extent in Quebec.

Thoughtful vote needed in Quebec

As the referendum campaign progresses, I find myself increasingly embarrassed by the views and news reported in The CJN.

It is a foregone conclusion that most Quebec Jews will vote No, but there surely is a distinction between a thoughtful vote and the vote of a blind and anxious herd.

It is interesting to compare our behavior to that of the Quebec francophone community. They have their own share of stereotypes, but they at least seem willing to debate the issues, and their community is very divided on an issue which is really quite complex, even if it has become a little tiresome.

Were there more contact with the Quebec community, most Jews would be shocked to learn that Quebec nationalists want much the same things out of life that they do (the vehicles are indeed different) and they might be less certain and righteous in their voting intentions.

Keep Branson Hospital open

I recently completed my chairmanship of the North York Branson Hospital Partners In Health Campaign where with the support of the community, we reached and surpassed our $2-million goal. Through the support of donors, North York Branson Hospital now has a state of the art CT scanner, a new four-bed critical care step down unit, a two-bed unit for chronically ventilated patients and another half a million dollars worth of new equipment.

I join Branson Hospital chair, Karnike Doukmetzian in protesting the suggestion that emergency and in-patient services be removed from Branson. A large number of elderly members of the Jewish community require the convenience of Branson Hospital and it is incumbent upon all of us to write to our MPPs immediately and to urge that none of Branson's facilities be closed. This way we can insure that we will not read in the near future of a member of our community dying en route to some distant hospital.

Perspectives

Every vote is important

By MANNY BATSHAW

"To be or not to be" a Canadian. That indeed is the question for many Quebecers, come Oct. 30. Even the thought of a negative response is distressing and seems almost unthinkable.

Leaving aside the important political and economic arguments against separation, one might approach the upcoming referendum from an emotional perspective, as such considerations will undoubtedly influence the decision of many Quebecers. It is important for federalists to stress what being a citizen of Canada means for all Quebecers. It is, in effect, a passport to achievement and success, as well as a gateway to the world.

My observation is that Quebecers and all Canadians have derived great benefit from the Canadian nation we have constructed together. Quebec francophones have not only made major contributions to Canadian history, culture, politics and the economy, but have inpacted significantly worldwide in various sectors and disciplines. All this, it should be borne in mind, has occurred within the Canadian context. In turn, they have achieved significant prominence socially, economically and politically. Moreover, the French language, which is a source of enrichment for all of Canada, has made much progress in recent decades among the population at large.

All the while, non-francophone Quebecers have also benefited from their attachment to Canada and the province of Quebec. As a pluralistic society, Canada has offered Jews as well as diverse other communities, unique opportunities to enrich their cultural and religious lives. The cultural communities have emerged as an integral part of Quebec society and that of the rest of Canada.

Amidst the heated political debates, we often overlook the extraordinary advantages Canada offers its citizens and lose sight of our common achievements and interests as Canadians. Both our francophone and non-francophone youth will be facing new economic challenges in a society which will continue to be entrepreneur-driven and expected to adapt quickly to the technological changes that will increase in the next century. In this context of increasing globalization, the multiplication of borders will only create greater obstacles for future generations.

On several occasions, I have taken the opportunity to ask a number of those who advocate separation what motivates them. While many admit that they stand to lose economically if Quebec separates from Canada, a number of separatists indicate that they are influenced primarily by a desire to be masters in their own house. Some feel that they have experienced a sense of rejection or a lack of recognition of their uniqueness within the Canadian family. Others believe that independence will enhance the position of the French language and culture.

It is essential that French Canadians reflect upon the reality of their power and influence in determining their own destiny within the Canadian family. They can take extraordinary pride in being Canadian, Quebecers and francophone in much the same way as we Jews are proud of our similar attachments to Canada and to Quebec.

Nationalist movements have generally been a source of discomfort for Jews. While historically Quebec nationalism has included an anti-Semitic component, its contemporary expression is, for the most part, not driven by feelings of hostility toward Jews. While Quebecers are troubled by the consequences of nationalist movements which they view through the media, most recently and notably in Bosnia, many Quebec nationalists maintain that the Quebec expression of nationalism is different. Fortunately, Quebec nationalism is more diverse in its self-expression. The potentially negative effects of nationalism are a source of continued debate in Quebec. This is certainly a healthy sign.

It is still true, however, that many French Quebecers are motivated in their desire for separation by a sense of perceived injury at the hands of and grievance toward their English Canadian counterparts. This persists despite general acknowledgement that many grievances have been addressed. In seeking resolution to this highly emotional and visceral issue, French Quebecers will continue to challenge all Canadians in the future. The misconception of a homogenous English Canada, which is held by too many French Quebecers, is a notion which will have to be corrected in the future.

In presenting a federalist perspective, we must continue to stress that separation is not the best answer for French Quebecers, who can ultimately realize their goals in a country where a strong Quebec and a strong Canada are not incompatible. Rather than resolving perceived tensions between French and non-French Canadians, separation is more likely to exacerbate them. The fracturing of Canada through the loss of Quebec, will precipitate a complicated unravelling process which will impact negatively on both new entities.

I am confident that the Quebec referendum will produce a majority decision in favor of a united Canada. In stating this, I do not suggest that Canadians should become either complacent or overconfident about the outcome. Every vote is important and everything must be done to get the vote out. Beyond casting one's own ballot, friends, one should encourage neighbors and relatives to do likewise. Also those who can volunteer to serve as drivers or workers ought to go to their riding headquarters and offer to help.

I recall the story of the boxer who made the sign of the crucifix in the ring before the starting bell. A spectator turned to a priest and asked him if it would help the boxer. The priest replied, "If he can fight." We must pray, but we also must work hard to achieve the desired result — one Canada.

In the aftermath of a victory for the federalist forces in the referendum, Canadians must look to the future with a renewed sense of optimism. We must commit ourselves to continuing to seek changes to improve our country so that Canadians of all origins can feel increasingly comfortable within our uniquely Canadian mosaic. For many Canadians, this common goal will permit us to continue to grow from "strength to strength."

Referendum affects all citizens

By GOLDIE HERSHON AND MAX R. BERNARD
Special to The CJN

MONTREAL — As we approach the final days of the Quebec referendum campaign, people across the country await the results with much anticipation, tinged perhaps for some with a degree of anxiety. Canada's Jewish community will be among those carefully watching the outcome to know what effect it will have on our common future.

If the widely predicted victory of the federalist forces occurs, there will still remain a number of important challenges confronting Canadians in the months and years ahead. The issue of national unity has been traditionally viewed as a Quebec problem by many observers who approached the debate with questions like: "What does Quebec want?" However, the stark reality of this referendum has served for many as a clear reminder that the issue of national unity involves and affects all Canadians, wherever they may reside.

The course of the debate engendered by the campaign has made it apparent that the real question facing Canadians as we move towards the next century is "How do Canadians envisage the future?" Interestingly enough, when the Quebec government established regional commissions to consult Quebecers earlier this year about their political future, many groups and individuals chose instead to talk about economic and social change.

Rarely have Quebec separatist leaders drawn the rest of Canada so directly into what they have often described as a "Quebec-only issue." This reluctant invitation to participate in the unity debate is primarily related to the expressed intention of a separate Quebec to negotiate a new partnership with the rest of Canada. Although it may defy the logic of a breakup, the partnership notion as advanced by the separatists has created confusion for a significant group of Quebec electors. On the opposite side, federalist forces are continuing to warn Quebecers of the risks entailed in buying into this idea.

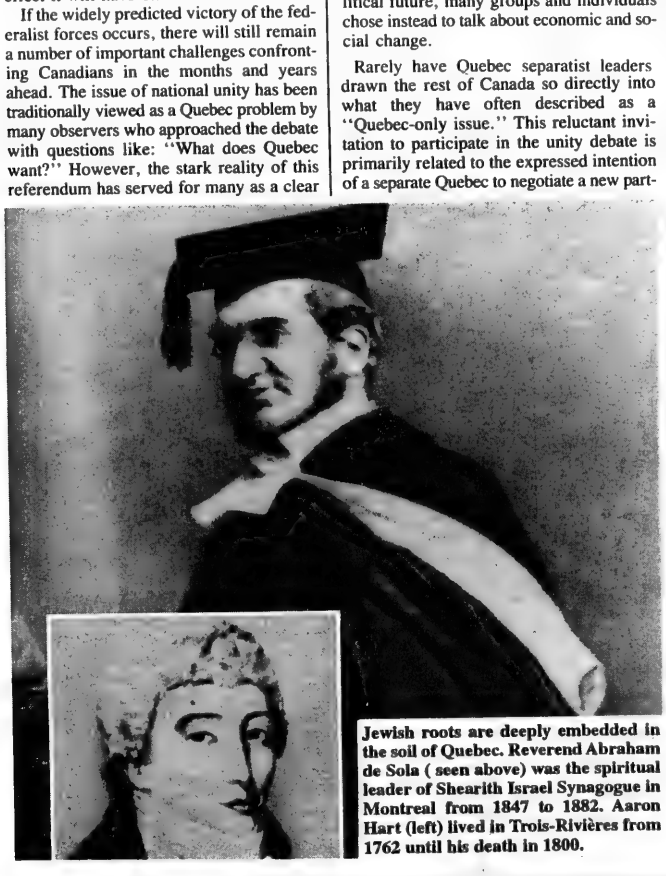
Another major aspect of the current debate is the degree to which the national unity issue is indistinguishable from the economic, cultural and social preoccupations that influence our daily lives. Moving to the forefront in the campaign have been matters of fundamental importance, such as the relationship between the government and its citizens, the issues of identity and belonging, relations between communities and the reinforcement of the democratic character of our society.

As a Jewish community, we can take pride in the role we have played and will continue to play in the process of nation-building. Participation in this debate and, for those of us residing in Quebec, the referendum vote itself, is therefore crucial if we are to have an impact on so many of these vital issues.

Our credibility as a Jewish community and the weight given to our voice by decision-makers and by society as a whole, depends upon our ability to thoughtfully and freely express our needs, our views and our concerns, as is our right and our duty. For that reason, Canadian Jewish Congress has made it abundantly clear that the vast majority of the Jewish population believe that Quebec should remain within Canada.

While politicians have generally taken the lead in attempting to resolve our national crises, there is undoubtedly an important role for individuals and organizations in facilitating discussion and exchange. Throughout this referendum year Quebecers have frequently called for a projet de société, a societal project which puts forward a vision of the future. In effect, this is a concern that Canadians share and something which we should offer to examine with our fellow citizens in Quebec. We must work on an ongoing basis to avoid national conflict, by building good will, trust and confidence between all Canadians, whatever their origin or political perspective.

Goldie Hershon is the president of Canadian Jewish Congress. Max Bernard is the chair of the national unity committee of Canadian Jewish Congress.



Jewish roots are deeply embedded in the soil of Quebec. Reverend Abraham de Sola (seen above) was the spiritual leader of Shearith Israel Synagogue in Montreal from 1847 to 1882. Aaron Hart (left) lived in Trois-Rivières from 1762 until his death in 1800.

'Unconventional' career choice

When I grow up I'm going to be a doctor ... a lawyer ... an accountant ... a journalist ...

A journalist?

By Viva Press

"Journalism? Ha, that's not a real profession," one of my former science teachers said, after I told him what I was studying. He couldn't comprehend that I went to university to study journalism.

Then he turned to my friend and asked her what she was studying. When she said accounting, his reply was "now that's a real job."

I was hurt that he didn't take my field of study seriously. He seemed to typify a view that many people still have, one which I often run into — that Jews who are serious scholars are supposed to be lawyers or doctors, accountants or engineers, teachers or dentists.

It's only in recent years that my generation's perspective has begun to gain ground. One's credibility in the work world is no longer bound up with fulfilling conventional expectations about what constitutes a meaningful career for a Jewish student. Now there tends to be a much more accepting attitude to Jewish women who are full-time journalists.

After I had been accepted at all of the universities to which I had applied, I knew I had a tough decision ahead of me.

I weighed the pros and cons of a bachelor of arts degree versus a bachelor of journalism honors degree. Both degrees have the potential of leading to an indeterminate place in the job market — that is, most likely, no work!

What was it that led me to choose a university that I had never seen, in a place that I had never visited and where I knew nothing about the Jewish presence on campus? The program at the University of King's College (UKC) in Halifax was the incentive.

The journalism program here obligates students to meet the requirements for a bachelor of arts degree, in addition to offering a rigorous immersion in journalism-related courses. In order to remain in this four year program, one has to maintain the honors average set by Canadian universities in all credits.

CAMPUS VOICE

The first-year program, a study of Western civilization through literature, a prerequisite for all journalism students, is considered the best of its kind by many universities. This program is worth four credits at King's and is ranked as equivalent to five credits at the University of Toronto.

Unlike a general BA degree, the honors journalism degree here will guarantee that I receive a solid education and journalistic expertise. The combination should make it easier for me when I am looking for a job.

But a Jewish journalist?

I am the only Jewish student of the 31 students in my second-year class, and among the 150 journalism students attending King's, there are only seven Jewish students. But the low number of Jews at my university does not represent the steadily increasing number of high-profile female Jewish journalists in the media today. After all, Michele Landsberg, Susan Kastner, Lila Sarick ...

Until a few months ago, I felt that I was justifying my choice of career to the Jewish community, instead of being commended for it. It was constantly being pointed out to me that journalism is synonymous with high stress, bad hours, an unusual burnout rate and poor pay. My big break came this past summer when I interned at The Jerusalem Post in Israel.

Working in Israel was a whole new experience. Nobody at work asked me why I had chosen a profession that can be so volatile. Sure, I was asked what intrigued me about journalism, but there were no inferences that I was headed toward an insecure future. There were no insinuations that journalism is a trade rather than a professional career. There was an atmosphere that couldn't be felt anywhere else: everybody there was like me, Jewish journalists, perfectly matter-of-fact and comfortable about their chosen work.

When I returned to Canada, I came back with a new sense of confidence. I now know that I am not studying what is often referred to as a "bird" course, but rather that I am entering a profession that demands ongoing learning.

I am trying to spread the word that journalism, like other non-traditionally perceived "Jewish" professions, is and can be a Jewish career.

I'm not studying to be a doctor or accountant, an engineer or dentist, a lawyer or ...

I'm studying to be a journalist because I want to.

I am Jewish and I'm proud to say that I aspire to be a journalist. Yes, a Jewish journalist.

Viva Press is a second year journalism student at the University of King's College in Halifax, N.S.

'As is his name so is he'

By JACK CHISVIN

"And Abraham called the name of his son that was born unto him, who Sarah bore to him, Isaac" — Gen. 21:2-3.

By Jack Chisvin

"And after that came forth his brother, and his hand held on Esau's heel; and his name was called Jacob" — Gen. 25:24-26.

And on the 15th day of Av in the year 5755 a son was born unto Karen and David, brother to Deborah and he was named Isaac Jacob — CJN 26:10:95.

In biblical narratives children were named the moment they were born, by the mothers and the attending midwives, as the fathers were not present. They usually chose names appropriate to the mother's experience or conditions of the birth itself. Sarah laughed with delight and astonishment when she became pregnant at the age of 90, so she not unexpectedly named her son Isaac, which means laughter. Jacob is a play on the Hebrew word for heel, depicting his entry into the world. In later years he was called Israel, signifying a captain or prince of God.

In the Ashkenazi tradition children are named after deceased loved ones.

Reacting to an instinct to bring back old names, my grandson, Isaac Jacob, is named after his paternal grandfather and great grandfather, perpetuating memory and assuring a Jewish future.

Isaac and Jacob, what nobility and heroism are in those names. Yet, I have been asked several times what my grandson is called in English. I wonder if Isaac Newton's grandfather or Isaac Brock's grandfather was ever asked that question. Jewish parents seem to have gone through several generations of bestowing gentilic names on their children, names without a history, names that rob children of that which would enrich them.

"What's in a name? That which we call a rose by any other name would smell as sweet." Not so Mr. Shakespeare. We read in the scriptures that "As is his name so is he." There is a further Talmudic comment: "One's name has influence on one's life."

I had a classmate in high school whose name was Hope and she had a sister named Faith. What were the circumstances of those births and were these names of cause or effect? Names reflecting human aspirations often appear in literature. "Charity and Mercy — not unholy names," wrote Charles Dickens.

Some names are so inappropriate that people either change them or revert to nicknames. In our family, everyone is known by their proper given names. When our son, who was just a little guy at the time, was called Howie, as in a famous hockey player of that day, he would assert himself: "My name is Howard" and would proceed to ignore the caller. Today no one would think of calling this strapping six-foot-tall young man, Howie.

"This is My covenant, which you shall keep between Me and you and thy seed after thee: every male among you shall be circumcised." — Gen. 17:10.

"And Abraham circumcised his son Isaac when he was eight days old as God had commanded him." — Gen. 21:4.

And on the eighth day after his birth, Isaac Jacob was circumcised as God had commanded unto all generations. CJN 26:10:95.

Since the time of the biblical Isaac's circumcision, the ritual has become ceremonial and formalized. There are certain honors confirmed on those attending the ceremony, the highest being that of sandek — from the Greek for godfather. The sandek holds the child as the mohel does his thing and is consequently recognized as the godfather. Isaac Jacob's godfather is his Uncle Howard. In the intimacy of the occasion and in that miraculous communication which only they who share a holy experience can comprehend, the two entered into a covenant of their own. "This is my covenant which you shall keep between me and you and it shall be our bond; I will call you Jake and you will call me Uncle Howie."

Kohelet tells us that every person has three names: one his/her father and mother gave him/her, one others call him/her and one acquired himself/herself. In echoing every grandparent's prayer, I wish that Isaac Jacob may grow up in a life of laughter and may he truly be a prince of God inspired by his patriarchic names.

Seniors are not parasites

I happen to be a senior and a member of the Canadian Association for Retired Persons (CARP), even though the term "retired" doesn't fit me. I retired almost 18 years ago as senior rabbi of Holy Blossom Temple, in order to devote myself to writing and lecturing — but that meant changing careers and not retirement in the usual sense.

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut

But I am a senior citizen and have come to resent the social obloquy heaped on our age group. In the climate of cost-cutting, everyone who gets money from the government is deemed a likely candidate for being dubbed a parasite. Elders are increasing in number while the work force decreases proportionally. Thus the conclusion suggests itself that we are takers rather than givers.

That view is faulty on two counts.

One, many of us continue to be taxpayers; and if we earn more than $52,000 we have to return our Old Age cheques to the government. As for Canada Pension payments, we paid into the system and considered it a kind of social insurance, and now there is talk that this too will be "adjusted."

Two, some of us are poor and some are not, just as younger people are. The percentage may differ, but the principle is the same.

What the latest issue of CARP's magazine points out forcefully is this: Seniors may not all earn money in the workplace, but they often contribute to the public weal through their voluntary activities. To give just once small illustration: If someone in your family ever was a patient at Mount Sinai Hospital in Toronto, you sat in the surgery or intensive care waiting room and received coffee, advice and emotional support from a senior volunteer. Waiting for crucial news is enormously stressful, and the volunteer was the right person at the right time. Every reader of this column can cite other examples, and CARP lists many of them.

The trouble is that at a difficult and uncertain time, the public is looking for convenient scapegoats. The elderly make a good target and they have few defences to set the record straight. Whenever TV deals with our category, we are almost inevitably shown in a nursing home, confined to a wheelchair and starting blankly at the viewer. The latest statistics show that only eight per cent of all seniors are institutionalized — but the nursing home image persists.

Even the advertising industry, which is usually aware of market opportunities, has fallen into the trap of considering seniors as non-buyers and blandly overlooks them as a potent portion of the consumers. Only the occasional ad is directed at them, and even then it may be demeaning. I don't know whether a certain car manufacturer still runs this blip, but it ran as follows: a senior woman comes into the show room and the first thing the salesperson asks her is not, "What kind of a car do you have in mind?" but "What color car are you thinking of?" Needless to add that the customer fit the proverbial stereotype of the slightly ludicrous: she was of course wearing tennis shoes, and at the end kicked the tire to make sure that the car she had bought was in good shape. The ad managed to demean women and the elderly together as obviously brainless.

Jewish tradition asks us to respect the elderly. The Torah says, "Rise before the gray head and honor the old." I can't remember when someone got up in the subway or bus to give me a seat.

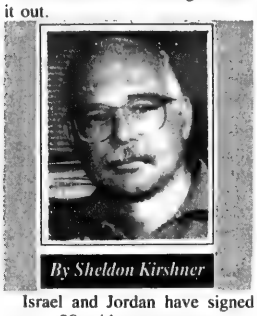
Peace with Jordan — one year later

A year after Israel and Jordan formally entered into a peace treaty, the two former adversaries are striving to flesh it out.



By Sheldon Kirshner

Israel and Jordan have signed some 20 side agreements on tourism, aviation, agriculture, energy and the environment since Oct. 26, 1994, the day the treaty was officially promulgated in an elaborate ceremony in the Arava desert.

The treaty — Israel's second with an Arab country since 1979 — has gone down well in Israel, even among right-wing politicians who once imagined that they could solve the Palestinian problem at Jordan's expense ("Jordan-is-Palestine").

But in Jordan, which has a large Palestinian population, it has been denounced by Islamic fundamentalists, secular Arab nationalists and heads of professional associations, all of whom vehemently oppose the incremental process of normalization.

The treaty has been cautiously embraced by the Jordanian elite and the chief pillar of the regime, the armed forces. Jordan's supreme ruler, King Hussein, is one of its warmest advocates, having glowingly described it as "a peace with commitment" and "an honorable peace."

Yet for now, the treaty is more like a pragmatic arrangement between states rather than people. In this sense, it resembles Israel's historic accord with Egypt, where anti-Israel feelings on the grassroots level are still rather common, even after 16 years.

Observers are not surprised by the less than rapturous reception the treaty has received in Jordan. Old animosities, misconceptions and stereotypes die hard, and assuming that a measure of stability and continuity prevail in Jordan, several generations may pass before real normalization sets in.

Certainly, both sides have a vested interest in the treaty.

Israel wants peace and quiet on its once volatile eastern front, as well as Arab recognition of its existence and its place in the region. And of course, Israel hopes that its budding relationship with Jordan will encourage other Arab nations to follow suit.

Jordan — which has been sucked into several wars with Israel and wracked by periods of domestic instability — believes that its rapprochement with Israel will pay political and economic dividends in the form of foreign investment, development projects, Western assistance and debt write-offs, and military support by the United States and other Western powers.

In addition, Israel and Jordan share similar strategic objectives. Both are wary of Islamic fundamentalism and radical Arab nationalism and both desire a realistic solution of the long-simmering Palestinian question. The Jordanian ambassador to Israel, Marwan Muasher, warned recently that bilateral relations would suffer unless the Palestinian issue is satisfactorily resolved.

Jordan has already reaped the benefits of peace. By the terms of the treaty, Israel has returned more than 300 square kilometres of disputed territory and promised to divert 50 million cubic metres of water per annum, to Jordan. Furthermore, some 80,000 Israeli tourists have poured across the frontier, enhancing Jordan's foreign currency reserve. (So far, few Jordanians have visited Israel).

But open borders have yet to yield a boom in trade. Indeed, a trade pact has yet to be signed. Dan Gillerman, president of the Israel Federation of Chambers of Commerce, has said that while Israeli entrepreneurs are interested in the Jordanian market, Jordan's business community is dragging its feet.

The problem may be more complicated than he suggests. Alexander Bligh, an Israeli scholar, claims that Israel and Jordan do not have complementary economies. As he put it: "Jordan can't pay for the things we produce and doesn't produce anything we want."

True or not, the fact of the matter is that Jordanians fear the spectre of Israeli economic domination, one of the reasons why 40 per cent of Jordan's urban dwellers are against the treaty, according to a University of Jordan poll.

No less a personage than Jordan's envoy to Israel acknowledges that the majority of Jordanians have a "lukewarm and guarded" attitude toward the treaty. Jordanians, he said, are reserving judgment until the outcome of Israel's final status talks with the PLO, due to begin in May 1996. These negotiations will deal with complex issues to which Jordanians attach great importance. They include the fate of Palestinian refugees and the status of Jewish settlements in the territories.

The opposition to the treaty is spearheaded by the Islamic bloc, which holds 16 of 80 seats in Jordan's parliament. The Islamists can count on the support of Arab nationalists. When the treaty was submitted for approval last November, it passed by a margin of 55 to 23, with two abstentions.

But King Hussein realizes that even diehard monarchists, who comprise the bedrock of his loyalists, are hesitant. Recently, the minister of state for prime ministerial affairs resigned, citing irreconcilable reservations. And last spring, many Jordanians, ostensibly close to King Hussein, boycotted an Independence Day reception at the Israeli embassy in Amman.

Fearing a massive crackdown, the Islamists have invariably vented their anti-Israel wrath through non-violent means. But five months ago, the police arrested 40 Islamists after two armed men wounded a French diplomat, mistaking him for an Israeli.

For all their efforts, the anti-Israel diehards have basically failed to stop the gradual march toward normalization. Last July, parliament repealed three basic laws which had prohibited the sale of land to, and trade with, Israelis. Then the authorities banned a conference called to denounce normalization.

But professional associations have definitely exerted a chilling effect on normalization.

Examples abound:

The journalists' association expelled a writer who granted an interview to an Israeli newspaper. A lawyer who visited Israel was disbarred. A dentist who treated an Israeli was warned not to do so again.

A visit to Jordan by Israeli school children, designed to reciprocate a Jordanian trip, was blocked. The Istanbul Restaurant, supposedly the sole kosher establishment in Jordan, was forced to close after receiving threats.

Israel, apparently unable to buy or to rent quarters for its permanent embassy, temporarily housed in a hotel, has been forced to build an embassy from scratch.

King Hussein is cognizant of the mood in his country. When he decided to take the plunge and establish diplomatic ties with Israel, he proceeded cautiously, knowing that he had no altervative but to prepare the ground carefully.

Secret meetings

On Sept. 14, 1993, just a day after Israel and the PLO crowned their secret talks with a Declaration of Principles, Israel and Jordan unveiled an agenda for peaceful relations.

A month later, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres went to Amman and initialled an agreement outlining plans for regional development projects and a commitment to sign a peace pact.

In July 1994, King Hussein declared publicly that he would be willing to meet with Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin. (King Hussein had numerous meetings with Israeli leaders, but in secret.) Soon afterward, Israeli and Jordanian officials held talks on the border.

On July 25, Jordan and Israel ended their state of belligerency. In August, they announced plans for cooperation in various fields and direct telephone links.

On Oct. 17, Israel and Jordan signed a draft peace treaty, and soon afterward, the treaty was ratified.

Since then, the buds of peaceful coexistence have sprouted in what was once arid soil. And now, Israel and Jordan are moving forward despite resistance.

There are plans to build a joint airport in the Eilat-Aqaba area and a port facility linking the Israeli and Jordanian shores of the Dead Sea; to erect a jointly-managed dam on the Jordan River; and to construct a rail line from Irbid to Haifa.

In short, the treaty is changing the face of Israel's relationship with Jordan, notwithstanding dissident Jordanian voices.

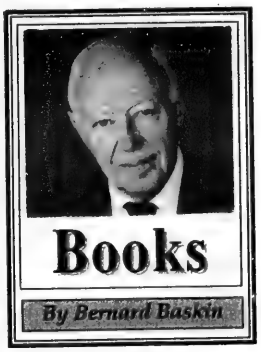
An ambitious exposition of Jewish belief and practice



The Jewish Religion: A Companion, by Louis Jacobs (Oxford University Press, $51.95).

This is an ambitious and admirable book. Rabbi Louis Jacobs, among the best known of Jewish theologians, has written a personal, fresh and readable explanation of almost every aspect of Jewish belief and practice, both ancient and modern.

After a concise seven page introduction to Judaism and how it is practised today, Rabbi Jacobs provides a wealth of information in alphabetical form on such subjects as: biblical and modern personalities, fanaticism, homosexuality, mikvah, Hellenism, Zohar, world to come and Zoroastrianism.

Most of the entries are brief; those dealing with major themes receive more extended treatment: God, Talmud, Kabbalah, heaven and hell, study and Zionism.

The following pieces of information, excerpted from some of the entries, indicate something of the author's style and the book's contents.

• Dead Sea Scrolls. "It is all very exciting stuff, but, it has to be said, of hardly any relevance to contemporary Jewish religion since it was known, long before the discoveries, that there are variant readings in the Bible and that in the period before the destruction of the Temple in 70 CE there was a proliferation of Jewish sects."

• Death and Burial. "It is customary to wash the hands before leaving the cemetery. Two reasons are given for this washing of the hands. One is that it amounts to a symbolic declaration that the hands are clean of having done anything so to distress the deceased as to hasten his death. The other reason is to encourage the living symbolically to wash their hands clean of preoccupation with death, since life must go on."

• Golem. "Mary Shelley is supposed to have based her story of Frankenstein on the golem legend ... Maharal of Prague was said to have created a golem in order to protect the Jews of Prague from pogroms. When the golem began to get out of hand, the Maharal took the divine name from his forehead and restored the golem to his dust which is now supposed to reside in an attic in the Altneuschul. When Gershom Scholem heard that the Weizmann Institute at Rehovot had completed the building of a new computer, he suggested that in his opinion, the computer should be called Golem 1."

• Kapparot. "Atonements, expiations; the rite in which a live cock is waved around the head on the eve of Yom Kippur and the words recited: 'This is my substitute, this is my vicarious offering, this is my atonement. This cock will go to its death, but I shall have a long and pleasant life in peace.' The superstitious and even pagan element in the rite was recognized as early as the 13th century when it was opposed by many outstanding halachic authorities." Today a substitute sum of money is often given to charity for the cock, and the prayer is worded accordingly.

• Shatnas. "A mixed garment of wool and linen. The prohibition against wearing this kind of garment is stated in Leviticus ... It is curious to find that the priests wore garments that contained shatnas, which the Rabbis explain as a special dispensation. Some modern scholars have suggested that this is precisely why shatnas is forbidden. For a non-priest to wear such a garment is for him to encroach on the sacred ... In the Leviticus verse, the prohibition is mentioned together with those against cross-breeding animals and mixing plants, from which it appears that the idea behind it is to keep species separate as God has made them."

This handsome volume is augmented by an appendix with recommended works of reference.

Extending Abraham's crusade

By RABBI YEHIEL BENAYON

The Torah reveals clear contradictions between the personalities of Noah and Avraham.

Noah was perceived by his contempories as an eccentric. Totally misunderstood, he was quite irrelevant and even irksome to his society. His preaching to them of impending doom was in the form of non-verbal communication. By publicly building his ark, he hoped to impress upon them G-d's displeasure. Instead, he was scorned. In the end, he succeeded in saving only himself and his immediate family. The ark as a symbol is a reflection of Noah, for it too was closed to the world — a small speck on a stormy ocean and of little significance to anyone.

Whereas Noah lost the opportunity to redeem the world, Abraham became the "father" of the world, av hamon goyim. Abraham and Sarah offered their belief in a single, all powerful, if invisible G-d. Whereas Noah and his ark were closed, Abraham and Sarah's tent was open in all directions. Like Noah, their presence and message irked some elements of society, but in response they met this with the challenge of inviting, of engaging and of dialogue.

Two distinct characters, one of which is obviously preferred. Yet the Torah does not discount the other: "Noah was a righteous man." Evidently there exists a proper place for all, even for those among us whose Jewish expression we perceive as insular and impenetrable. Like Noah, they are misunderstood — to some a benign throwback, an item of curiosity; to others, at best, grudgingly tolerated as they seemingly build barriers between themselves and a world that they don't comprehend or even care to.

Society likes to identify with the Abraham and Sarah persona; openness, expression and honest exchange are all virtues, symptoms of confidence and strength. Judaism, while accepting and making room for the Noah personality, calls on all to be an Abraham and Sarah to the world. Noah salvaged, Abraham and Sarah saved. Every person, Jew and gentile, in their own capacity, with their own talents, intellect and personality can be G-d's ambassador on earth.

Commenting on the appellation of Avraham Ha'Ivri, the rabbis say: "The whole world stood on one side of the river bank (ever) while Abraham stood on the other bank [ever — hence ivri]." Yet Abraham understood this solitude as a void to be filled, a call to bring others unto his side and to populate it.

Similarly, there is a calling for us to articulate Judaism to others, "inreaching" to family, community and society. Abraham and Sarah's best and most convincing sermon was the example that they set forth.

The days when religious observance seemed moribund, its ways as out of style and out of step as those few and elderly who protectively clung to them, are no longer. Today, the face of religious observance is one of school children, of university students and of young adults, all successfully, as well as happily, living a life of meaning and purpose. It is multifaceted, with gifted people of business, academics and professionals within its ranks, persons for whom religion was often a rediscovery rather than a matter of upbringing.

Each of us possesses the capacity to extend the crusade of Abraham and Sarah by opening ourselves, our outlook, the beauty and tranquillity of Shabbat, the love and rhythm in a Jewish family, the inner peace and wisdom inherent in Judaism. Let us open our lives and homes so that others can witness how relevant, fulfilling and possible uncompromising Jewish living can be.

Berton recalls Canada's postwar anti-Semitism

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Pierre Berton, who was honored last week at the International Festival of Authors for his contribution to Canadian letters over nearly half a century, began his journalistic and literary career at Toronto-based Maclean's magazine in 1947.

In that era, a subtle but persistent form of anti-Semitism pervaded Canadian society.

Berton was one of an increasing number of liberal writers and thinkers who drew attention to this through their work.

He exposed the problem in a thoughtful magazine article, No Jews Need Apply, that appeared in November 1948 with the subhead: Ghettos in Canada? Or pogroms? Hardly. But try looking for a job — in engineering, say — if your name is Greenberg.

Two women with similar backgrounds and training each answered 47 newspaper ads placed by companies seeking office staff. One used the name Greenberg, the other Grimes.

Greenberg, who phoned first, was granted only 17 appointments, and in 21 instances was told the job was filled. "In nine other cases," Berton reported, "she got every kind of a brush-off, from a phone slammed in her ear to a polite voice telling her, 'You wouldn't want the job anyway.' "

Grimes, on the other hand, secured 41 appointments. Only in six cases was she told the job was filled.

The firms which had discriminated against Greenberg manufactured or sold a wide variety of products ranging from business machines, construction equipment, hardware or groceries, to insurance, perfume and trucks. One was a social welfare agency. Berton spoke to some of their personnel managers, several of whom freely admitted to "an unwritten law that we don't employ Jews."

Jewish Vocational Services had recently been established in Toronto, Berton reported. Some 113 Jewish job-hunters were polled on whether they had ever been asked about race or religion during an interview and 53 said yes.

Canada's 1941 census graphically portrays the dilemma of the Jew in Canada, Berton wrote. He observed that Jews fared poorly, in terms of promotion, in occupations where they worked for gentile employers.

"The census figures show that in professions where a man is his own boss (medicine, law, dentistry) the proportion of Jews is higher than the 15 per 1,000 part that the Jews form in the total population. (Seven per cent of all lawyers are Jewish; similarly, six per cent of all doctors, five per cent of all dentists.)"

Ironically, these comments from nearly half a century ago seem astonishingly relevant today, indeed almost prescient. In recent weeks, two Toronto radio broadcasters have been censured for controversial anti-Semitic remarks they made on-air about the "disproportionate" numbers of Jews in the Canadian legal profession. Both subsequently apologized.

As a measure of how pervasive anti-Jewish prejudice in Canada was in 1948, one official of the Canada's National Employment Service (NES) even admitted to Berton that little red Xs were sometimes marked on index cards of Jewish registrants.

"This doesn't necessarily mean that the NES employee is discriminating against Jews," Berton concluded. "He knows there are certain firms which will not consider Jewish applications and it would only cause the applicant embarrassment to be sent there and turned down."

Discrimination was rampant in the social world, too. Berton cited multiple instances of Jews being denied membership to numerous country clubs.

He also referred to a May 1948 Ontario legal precedent — "the Schroeder decision" — that apparently made it "perfectly legal for summer resort owners, at least, to sell property on the condition that it not be resold to persons of Jewish race or religion."

A study of 29 summer resorts in Quebec showed that while someone named Marshall could make a reservation for a two-week holiday at 24 of them, someone named Rosenberg could make a similar reservation at only 12.

A Gallup poll conducted in January 1943 asked Canadians what nationalities they would oppose admitting into the country after the war. "Forty-seven per cent of those questioned said they'd keep out Jews. This answer was all the more startling because it showed that Jews placed next to Germans and Japanese — who were our enemies at the time — as the most undesirable immigrants."

Responding to a similar survey in 1946, the percentage of respondents opposed to Jewish immigration increased to 49.

It seems clear, as one reads of the Canada that Berton describes, that the pendulum has swung a great distance towards multicultural tolerance in the intervening decades. However, instances of anti-Semitic and other forms of racism which have occurred here in recent years may make one justly wonder whether the pendulum has begun to swing back.

That, of course, would be a shame — for all Canadians. "The wall of segregation which today keeps the Greenbergs estranged from the Peabodys is as high as ever," Berton's article concluded. "And like all walls, it can cripple the freedom of men on both sides of it. Until it comes down, it stands in the way of both Jew and gentile — a stubborn and ugly barrier blocking the pathway to the good life."

Insurance agent Murray Ehrlick was active in community affairs

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Murray Ehrlick, long-time insurance agent and community worker, died here recently from injuries received in a traffic accident. He was 77.

Born in Toronto, Ehrlick attended Harbord Collegiate Institute, where he was honored as the best high school football player in Toronto, before earning an athletic scholarship to Queen's University.

He kept his love of sports all his life, said his wife of 54 years, Edythe (Ede). He played tennis and golf often and well, she said.

He served in the Air Force during World War II, and in 1945 he joined Dominion Life Insurance Co., (now Manulife) where he remained until his death. Most recently, he worked out of the Markham office of the Toronto York Resource Centre.

He was also a partner in his own general insurance agency, Ehrlick & Associates.

Murray Ehrlick

Charles Chaplin, a friend for many years, told The CJN that "being involved in the insurance business was a fitting career for someone involved with others," as Ehrlick was.

Ehrlick was involved in communal affairs, including B'nai Brith; General Wingate Branch of the Canadian Legion; Canadian Jewish Congress; the Jewish Camp Council; the Jewish Home for the Aged Men's Service Group; United Jewish Appeal and Senior Care. He held many officer and board positions in those organizations.

He also was a founder and past president of the Maple Downs Golf and Country Club.

Chaplin said Ehrlick was very involved in the recent merger of five Toronto B'nai Brith lodges into Metro Toronto Lodge.

"He felt an obligation for the good things he enjoyed. He tried to repay [that obligation] by helping others," Chaplin said.

"I have never known anyone better liked and respected."

Ede Ehrlick said that the food left over from the shivah was donated to feed the hungry through Second Harvest. "He would have appreciated that," she said.

Besides his wife, Ehrlick is survived by children Allan, Steven and Andrea Goldstein and four grandchildren.

Child victims remembered

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — With the enthusiasm characteristic of preteens, about 40 students from two midtown Toronto schools dug deep into the earth to plant dozens of tulip bulbs in memory of the child victims of the Holocaust.

"It's really nice to remember people who died in the war," said 10-year-old Alex Molnar, just before he wedged his trowel into the earth at Amsterdam Park, at the corner of St. Clair and Avenue Road.

Molnar, along with fellow grade 5 and 6 students from Deerpark Public School and Brown Public School, was participating in the sixth annual bulb-planting at the park.

The program was inspired by the success of an Ontario Place exhibit in 1989 in honor of Anne Frank, the Jewish girl who hid from the Nazis with her family and others in an Amsterdam apartment. They were eventually discovered and Frank died in Bergen-Belsen.

Frank was remembered by Paul Schellekens, consul general of the Netherlands, who pointed out to the students that she was sent to her death only because she was different.

As the students took turns planting the bulbs, Deborah Gladstone, a teacher at Brown P.S., said the children were "riveted" when Holocaust survivor Robert Engel earlier described to them his wartime experiences.

"That brings the whole situation alive to the children the way movies and books can't," she said.

Engel, past chair of the Holocaust Remembrance Committee of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto, said his message to the children was to oppose intolerance.

Others participating in the bulb-planting included three Jewish war veterans, Sam Romberg, Al Labovitch and Reuben Cherry.

Romberg told The CJN that the three were in Holland for the 50th anniversary commemoration of the country's liberation. They were impressed that the Dutch children knew about the war. "They go to the cemeteries and plant flowers on all the graves. They're taught about the Holocaust," he said.

Ada Wynston, a hidden child who was born in Amsterdam, said the bulb-planting ceremony was important "to ensure that the growing up generation will be aware of what happened so it can't happen again."

Wynston, who owes her life to the efforts of the Dutch underground, said she was hidden in four different south Holland locations during the war and was liberated by Canadian troops.

Also present was Dick Nienhuis, director of the Dutch Canadian Association of Greater Toronto. There are approximately 50,000 Dutch-Canadians in the Greater Toronto area, he said.

The event was co-sponsored by the Holocaust Remembrance Committee and the Dutch community.

HAVE PIANO, WILL TRAVEL

Sixteen-year-old Mali Dvir of Thornhill, Ont. will realize her dream of performing in her native Israel. Mali has been selected to perform at two Junior Original Concerts to be held at the Tel Aviv Opera House next month. The nationally televised concerts, sponsored by Yamaha, are under the patronage of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

Jerusalem 3000 concert

TORONTO — Come see Israeli muscian/performer and Broadway star, Mike Burstyn, at the George Weston Recital Hall, Ford Centre for the Perfoming Arts in North York, Nov. 8 at 8 p.m.

A popular television star in Israel and Europe, Burstyn has recorded a number of albums, appeared in movies including Kuni Lemel and starred in several Broadway and off-Broadway plays.

He he played the title role in the hit musical Barnum, was nominated for a Drama Desk Award for his performance in The Rothschilds and recently starred as Mike Todd in Ain't Broadway Grand.

Also appearing at the concert accompanied by the Jerusalem Dancers will be Toronto's Ne'imot Singers under the direction of Israeli musician Doron Ophir, and Cantor Louis Danto.

The Ne'imot Singers and the Beth Emeth Bais Yehuda Synagogue music appreciation committee are presenting the evening of music, song and humor in celebration of Jerusalem 3000. Proceeds for the evening go to the Cantor Louis Danto Endowment Fund, which provides music scholarships.

For tickets and information, call the Ford Centre box office at 416-872-2222 or the synagogue office 416-633-3838.

JOANNE TUCKER, Choreographer and Artistic Director

Sunday, October 29, 1995 at 8 p.m.

The Avodah group is a New York-based ensemble of professional dancers specializing in classical and modern interpretive dance based on Jewish themes." Born in 1974, Avodah leaps past the hora to blend multiculturalism, Bible and ritual." Programs include Let My People Go, with an array of African, Japanese and Mexican instruments; The Akedah, which envisions the roles of Sarah and Hagar in the binding of Isaac; and I Never Saw Another Butterfly, inspired by the writings of young people in Czechoslovakian concentration camps.

Israeli feminist honored for working for peace

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A sudden smile transforms Galia Golan's serious and sometimes stern face when she mentions the inroads made by Jerusalem Link, a project combining her passions for promotion of peace and empowerment of women.

The fiftyish Hebrew University professor was honored on Oct. 12 by the New Israel Fund for her longstanding commitment to peace, social justice and women's equality when she was presented with the organization's second annual Alice Shalvi Israel Women's Leadership Award in Washington, D.C.

The American-born Golan made aliyah in 1966 after receiving degrees from Brandeis University and the Sorbonne. She received her doctorate from the Hebrew University, where she has been on staff since 1967.

Galia Golan

In the feminist realm, Golan created Israel's first women's studies program in 1981 and the first and only research centre on women's issues. Together with Alice Shalvi, she founded the advocacy organization Israel Women's Network in 1984.

A former national spokesperson for Peace Now, Golan is also the founder of Reshet, a forum for dialogue between Israeli and Palestinian women begun at the height of the intifadah. The aforementioned Jerusalem Link, with centres in east and west Jerusalem, is an outgrowth of Reshet.

"We have to build bridges," said Golan during a recent interview, a silver dove, the symbol of peace, glistening in her lapel.

While opponents of the peace process have raised the issue of whether Jews can trust the Palestinians, Golan has a different take on the issue. "I don't think it's a question of trust. They certainly don't trust us. When they see the roads to the settlements, they think we're not serious about moving out."

Israel's 1978 peace treaty with Egypt was not an indication of trust on either side, Golan noted. "The hope is that once you have [taken action], you can begin to build some degree of trust."

She noted that there is a Palestinian peace group in Gaza and similar groups "all over the West Bank."

Golan's work with Jerusalem Link and Peace Now is having an effect on the younger generation, she said. "What's encouraging is the interest there is [in programs bringing Jewish and Arab teens together], including fundamentalists and religious kids."

Golan is very optimistic about peace, but hedges when asked how long she thinks it will take. "We're on our way," she says with conviction.

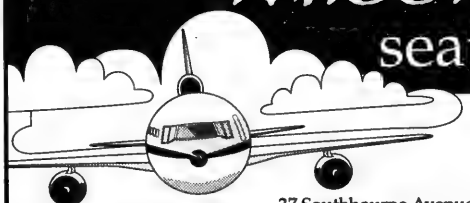
Mission 3000
seats are selling quickly



With over 500 participants from across Canada already registered, UJA's Mission 3000 is proving to be the most popular trip to Israel ever!

Elaine Lightstone is looking forward to an "emotional fix." Bev and Morton Stern are excited about briefings by Israeli political leaders and Bev Livshitz wants to "see places that others miss out on."

That's just a taste of what participants can expect from Mission 3000, the unbelievably priced, $1996 Israel trip of a lifetime, February 19-28, 1996.

Now you can do more than just imagine a mission. On NOVEMBER 2nd, 7:30 P.M., at ADATH ISRAEL SYNAGOGUE, 37 Southbourne Avenue, (Bathurst & Wilson) those who have signed on to Mission 3000, those who are still considering it and veteran UJA mission members will be sharing memories with first timers and learning more about what's in store.

You'll also hear Yehudi Kinar, Toronto's new Consul General from Israel, United Israel Appeal Missions Director, Victor Yagoda and warm stories about sharing Shabbat at the Kotel - the Western Wall - and climbing Massada before dawn.

You could even participate in Mission 3000 for free if you register by the end of the day November 1 and your name is picked during the Imagine a Mission night draw.

Mission 3000, celebrating 3000 years since King David designated Jerusalem as Israel's capital, will be touring Israel from top to bottom, including a gala Jerusalem evening.

Based on the experience of two previous missions, Bev Livshitz is looking forward to "getting back into the spirit." Bev and her husband are joining Mission 3000 for "a great opportunity to meet people."

Mission 3000 will be Bev and Morton Stern's third UJA trip to Israel. "They're very focused," says Bev. "I especially value the access that UJA provides us to political leaders who can talk to us about issues of peace and security."

Although Elaine Lightstone has visited Israel several times, "other tours," she tells us, "just don't compare with what UJA offers."

For more information call Hindy Friedman at the Mission 3000 Hotline (416) 636-1996 or 636-7655.

Don't delay. Seats are filling fast and you may have to wait another 3000 years for a mission like this one!

Leslie Dan named Negev Dinner honoree

TORONTO — Leslie L. Dan, founder, chair and CEO of the Novopharm group of companies, has been named the honoree of the 1995 Negev Dinner of the Jewish National Fund of Toronto.

The announcement was made by Tom Ungar, president of JNF Toronto, at the launch of the campaign leading up to the 47th annual Negev dinner to be held at Toronto's Sheraton Centre Hotel on Nov. 26.

Philanthropist, humanitarian and successful businessman, Leslie Dan arrived in Canada in 1947, a penniless teenage survivor of the Holocaust. He worked at a variety of odd jobs to help pay his way through school, graduating from U of T's School of Pharmacy and then receiving an MBA.

He founded International Pharmacy, which distributed drugs and medical parcels around the world. In 1965, he founded Novopharm, which now employs 2,900 people worldwide, including a staff of 170 devoted to research and development.

Many organizations, groups and health programs have benefited from what Dan calls his "spirit of giving" — Yad Vashem, Mount Sinai Hospital, the universities of Toronto and British Columbia, Weizmann Institute of Science, Baycrest Centre, UJA, JNF, B'nai Brith and many others.

He says he is particularly proud of the record of the Canadian Medicine Aid Programme (CANMAP) which he founded in 1985, supplying medicine and aid to the sick in Third World nations.

But the recipient of his largest gifts is Aish HaTorah, both in Jerusalem and here in Thornhill.

The proud father of three and grandfather of six, Dan insists that his philanthropy is not personal but from and on behalf of his family.

To mark the tribute to Dan as honoree of the 1995 Negev Dinner, the Dan Family Arava Development Project will be launched and dedicated to the memory of his wife Judy. The project will help reclaim major portions of the Arava, the area south of the Dead Sea stretching down along the border with Jordan to Eilat. The project will help to implement JNF's Action Plan Negev.

Co-chairs for the Negev Dinner will be Jack Gwartz and Sheila Engel.

For information on the Negev Dinner, contact the JNF Toronto office.

Save Branson Save Lives

The Metro Toronto District Health Council has recommended that Branson Hospital be closed.

Nearly forty thousand visits were made to Branson for emergency health care last year – that's one for every four persons living in our community. And that doesn't include the 83,000 days patients spent at Branson last year, for illnesses requiring hospitalization.

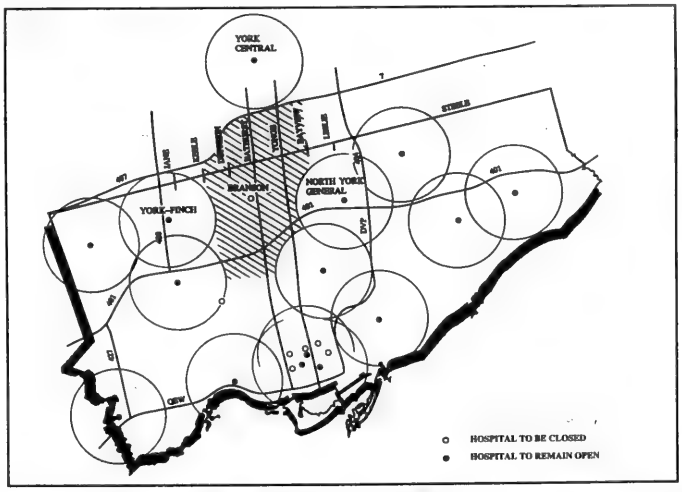
If the government implements the Health Council's recommendations, you and your family will have to travel to other hospitals outside your community for emergency and critical Inpatient care.

An emergency trip to the next nearest hospital will take significantly longer at a time when minutes count. Those extra minutes may be the difference between life and death.

Only you can stop the Health Council's plan to close Branson.

The government has said it will listen to the public and respond to community needs.

No other community in Toronto is being asked to sacrifice its most vital health care services. No other community that is, except for the 170,000 people served by Branson Hospital.



Make your voice count. Join the thousands of people who are already protesting the Health Council's recommendation to close Branson Hospital.

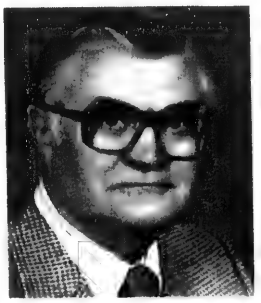
B.C. Press Council upholds complaint about Holocaust article

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent



Doug Collins

VANCOUVER — In a report released Oct. 17, the B.C. Press Council upheld parts of a complaint brought by Lionel Kenner of North Vancouver against controversial columnist Doug Collins and his newspaper North Shore News, but dismissed others.

Kenner alleged at a council hearing in July that Collins and the paper violated the council's Code of Practice with published columns on the Holocaust. The council is funded by the British Columbia print media and its function is to monitor the ethics and veracity of what its members publish, according to Jerry Porter, executive secretary.

Council members cannot be sued by complainants, nor can the publication be punished, but it must publish in full the finding of a council inquiry and run the report in a prominent spot in the paper.

Kenner, a retired Simon Fraser University professor, said in his complaint: "I have an interest in an honest press ... What is in question here is not freedom of the press but veracity."

The Press Council agreed with Kenner that a column quoting Israeli scholar Yehudah Bauer about the number of Holocaust victims was incorrect. Collins had quoted the New York Times as stating: "The larger figures [number of Holocaust victims] has been dismissed for years except it hasn't reached the public yet."

The council said the Times report of Nov. 12, 1989 quoted Bauer as referring specifically to victims at Auschwitz, and Collins used part of it to support his claim that the total number of Holocaust killings was in doubt.

Collins also asked, "What difference does it make whether the figure was six million or 100,000, as was stated by the Red Cross after the war?"

But Kenner provided information from the International Red Cross in Geneva which, said the Press Council report, "unequivocably refutes the authenticity" of Collins' source as genuine Red Cross documents.

The Press Council also criticized Collins for reporting "the gas chamber stuff" in a column which quoted Arno Mayer, a Jewish academic, as saying the sources on the gas chambers are "rare and unreliable." But the council points out that Collins did not finish the sentence and the Mayer report states that while gas chamber reports are ambiguous at times, "it must be emphasized strongly that such defects are altogether insufficient to question the use of gas chambers in the mass murder of Jews at Auschwitz."

The Press Council said the Collins columns on these points "breach the Code of Practice in that they misrepresent the original authors."

The council rejected Kenner's complaint that other points raised in a Collins column breached the code "and is unable to endorse the complainant's contention that Collins and the News conspired to mislead or to lie."

The council defended Collins' right to express an opinion when not writing a straight news story, and to "enjoy the widest possible latitude." The council reminded Collins, however, that such freedom "is not licence to alter or misquote the expression of others."

The council said Kenner "has engaged in a war of words with Collins and the News," but says it is a dispute the council cannot settle to anyone's satisfaction because the crux of the conflict is insoluble — different versions of "historical truth, held by two strong, articulate men ... The complaint is another chapter in a long, simmering disagreement over an interpretation of history."

The council says it cannot condemn Collins or the News "for exercising their constitutional right of freedom of expression any more than it would Mr. Kenner for exercising his. The council believes unpopular or controversial voices must be challenged but never silenced."

Collins has aroused the ire of Vancouver Jews for a number of years and Canadian Jewish Congress, Pacific region has lodged a complaint against him with the B.C. Human Rights Council, based specifically on a columns about the movie Schindler's List, which Collins described as "Schindler's Lies."

The complaint was made under a new section of the B.C. Human Rights Act, which permits action against published material that "discriminates and is likely to expose the persons to hatred or contempt on the basis of race, religion or ancestry." This will be the first test of the law if the Human Rights Council acts on the complaint.

CORRECTION

Exhibit captures Theresienstadt's 'texture of fear'

By MIRIAM SOBEL
CJN Ottawa Correspondent

OTTAWA—Visualizing Memory, parallel exhibits of the works of Leo Haas, an artist and survivor of the Theresienstadt concentration camp, and the works of contemporary artists from the Anton Lehmden Masterclass at the Academy of Fine Arts in Vienna, opened in Ottawa last week, the first stop on a North American tour.

Organized by the Montreal Holocaust Memorial Centre and the embassies of Israel and Austria, the show interprets the Theresienstadt experience from two points of view.

The first comes from the 50-year-old works of Haas, a Czech artist deported to the camp in 1942. He was assigned to the Drawing Office of the Technical Department, where he and other artists produced works for the Nazis to sell or use for public relations purposes, to give outsiders the impression that Theresienstadt was an attractive model ghetto.

In secret, Haas drew scenes of the real Theresienstadt, which was a holding camp for prisoners destined for Auschwitz. These prints survived the war and remained in his family's collection. Haas died in 1983 after a career as a professor at the Art Academy in Berlin.

The other half of the Visualizing Memory show are works of master class students who spent about a week at Theresienstadt two years ago at the request of an intern from the Gedenkdienst (Serving Memory) Project, a program that allows young Austrians to volunteer at Holocaust memorials in lieu of compulsory military service.

Thirteen young artists from around the world agreed to live on the site of the Gestapo prison and record their impressions of Theresienstadt in art.

"It's haunting when you look at the two exhibits together and see the similarity," says Naomi Kramer, education director of the Montreal Holocaust Memorial Centre, who helped organize the exhibit. "It's the texture of fear that comes through."

While it is uncommon to use art for Holocaust education, Kramer says, this exhibit shows what a powerful medium it is.

She said the Montreal Holocaust Memorial Centre had been in contact with the Haas family for several years and had wanted to show his works for some time. The centre learned of the Theresienstadt exhibit by the Master class artists through its contact with the Gedenkdienst Project. Several interns have worked at the Montreal Holocaust Memorial Centre in lieu of serving in the Austrian military.

In addition to the organizers, the show was supported by the Austrian Cultural Institute, the Community Foundation of Montreal, the Canada Israel Cultural Foundation and the Ottawa Shoah Remembrance Committee.

The show closes in Ottawa on Oct. 30 and then moves to Montreal, Quebec City, Washington, D.C., New York and Philadelphia. Kramer said the Montreal Holocaust Memorial Centre is also working out details for an exhibit in Europe.

Open your arms to all Jews, Cardin tells meeting

By ABRAHAM ARNOLD
Special to The CJN

DETROIT — Anyone who wishes to identify as a Jew and assume responsibility for teaching Jewishness to his or her children should be accepted as a Jew, whether in the Orthodox, Conservative, Reform or Secular Humanist branch of Judaism, said Shoshana Cardin here recently in her keynote address opening Colloquium 95 on The Unaffiliated Jew.

Cardin, chair of the United Israel Appeal in the United States and a former president of the Council of Jewish Federations, is a lifelong member of the Conservative movement whose husband and daughter are both Conservative rabbis.

She recalled that in the 1990 U.S. Jewish population survey, 1,135,000 Jews identified themselves as secular. "This is a fertile field for secular humanistic Judaism," she suggested.

Many people admit to being Jewish but don't care to join any Jewish group, she said. Jews under 50 are less affiliated and less concerned about Jewishness. And American Jews in the west are even less affiliated than in the east. Many Jews therefore "are definitely not candidates for religious Judaism."

She defined an unaffiliated Jew as one who does not associate with any Jewish groups, of which the synagogue is just one possibility.

She said young Jewish people are asking "What's in it for me?" She warned of increasing remoteness from Judaism with each succeeding generation.

"Assimilation is walking away from Jewishness," she said, adding that she feels assimilation may have reached its peak.

Cardin stressed that "the unaffiliated are not a group but individuals who must be attracted [to Jewishness] as individuals."

Turning to the countries of the former Soviet Union, she said that when it was breaking up, some 1,125,000 Jews were reported to be living there. Since then, 800,000 to 900,000 have emigrated, most of them to Israel. In the same period, more people have revealed themselves to be Jews, and therefore the number of Jews now living in Russia and related countries is still estimated at 1,125,000.

The history of the Jews, she said, "is not the history of oy vey. We are responsible for ourselves and for others, and for the totality of humanity. And this is not necessarily because we were created by God."

There is a tendency, she continued, to define Jews as "donors" or as "members." That has to be changed. "We need to redefine what it is to be a member of a Jewish community.

"Jews can be good Jews even if they don't believe in a deity. But don't fight against those who do believe in God," she concluded.

Cardin's keynote address followed the opening of a documentary exhibition entitled Jews and Figurative Art — the First 3,000 Years, organized and curated by Felice Pazner Malkin and sponsored by the Secular Humanistic Institute. The exhibit, comprised of over 75 works of art from ancient to modern times, continues on display at the Detroit Jewish Centre.

Humanistic Jews to meet

VICTORIA — Rabbi Sherwin Wine, founder of the Society for Humanistic Jews, will speak at a public meeting at the Jewish Community Centre here on Nov. 4.

According to a press release from the Victoria Society for Humanistic Judaism, the 26-year-old movement is represented in the United States, Canada, Argentina, Uruguay, France, Belgium, Israel and Australia, which are are united in an international federation.

There are over 30 humanistic congregations throughout the United States and there are 30,000 humanistic Jews throughout the world, the society claims.

Rabbi Wine, who is based in Farmington Hills, Mich., says his movement "affords an alternative to those Jews who are not religious but who value their Jewish identity and wish to observe our holidays and ceremonies with dignity and self-reliance."

The rabbi describes humanistic Judaism as "a fifth alternative," distinct from the Orthodox, Conservative, Reform and Reconstructionist streams.

Victoria is the only Canadian city to have a Humanistic Society, which was formed by Irvine Margolese, a community leader. Meetings are held several times a month and most holidays are observed in accordance with humanistic traditions.

CJN Chanukah Poetry Contest

The CJN announces its Chanukah poetry contest. We invite our readers to submit their own original poems.

Who can enter:
Anyone can enter except CJN employees or members of their family.

There are three age categories for entrants:

1. Twelve years old and under,
2. Thirteen to 18 years old,
3. Eighteen years old and up.

How to enter:
Although preconditions generally inhibit the imaginative, creative writing process, space considerations compel us to impose two conditions on the poems. They must be about the holiday of Chanukah and they cannot be longer than forty lines. A maximum of one poem per entrant may be submitted. Please include your name, age, address, and phone number with the poem. We would prefer to receive typewritten poems if possible.

We will return the poems if you provide a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

You may mail or deliver your poems to:
CJN Chanukah Poetry Contest, The Canadian Jewish News,
10 Gateway Blvd., Suite 420, Don Mills, Ontario, M3C 3A1.

The contest closes at 5:00 pm on Monday, Nov. 27, 1995.

Prizes:
The judges will choose six poems, two from each of the three categories, which in their opinion, most poetically and evocatively convey an aspect of the meaning of Chanukah. The "winning" poems will be published in The CJN Chanukah issue. In addition, each of the "winners" will receive a cheque for $50.00.

We will undoubtedly receive many worthy submissions. But only six will be selected as "winners". Space permitting, we may publish other poems as honourable mentions. The decisions of the judges will be final. The odds of winning depend upon the number and the quality of submissions received.

How the winners will be notified:
Winning entrants will be notified by telephone before the start of the Shabbat on Friday, Dec. 1, 1995.

When the prizes will be awarded:
The winning poems will be published in The CJN of Dec. 14, 1995. We look forward to receiving your poems. May the miracle of Chanukah and the magic of its light be reflected in your poems.

Any litigation respecting the conduct and awarding of a prize in this contest may be submitted to the Regie des Loteries et courses du Quebec.

UN resolution on World War II omits 'Holocaust'

CJN News Services

UNITED NATIONS — On the eve of celebrating its own 50th birthday, the United Nations last week marked the 50th anniversary of the end of World War II with a resolution that irked Israel because of its omission of any reference to the Holocaust.

The resolution noted the "untold sorrows and ravages to mankind" wrought by the war, and "those who fought against dictatorship, oppression, racism and aggression."

Sponsored by Russia and adopted by the General Assembly last Wednesday, the statement took note of the "tens of millions of those who perished in their towns and villages, on the battlefields and in the death camps in a genocide."

But it omitted any specific reference to the Holocaust, despite persistent efforts by Israel to include it.

"This resolution does not mention the Holocaust, but I must," Israel's UN Ambassador Gad Yaacobi said in a short but dramatic statement to the General Assembly immediately prior to the resolution's adoption.

The ambassador said he must make specific reference to the Holocaust "for the six million whose voices have been forever silenced, for the Jewish people, for the state of Israel. And for future generations."

In Israel, officials of Yad Vashem had asked Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin to have Israel boycott the UN debate unless it included specific mention of the Holocaust.

In a letter to Rabin, who was among some 150 world leaders to address the General Assembly this week, Yad Vashem chair Avner Shalev and research head Prof. Yisrael Gutman noted the UN had turned down a request by the Israeli delegation to include the Holocaust in its resolution.

This will "encourage neo-fascist, racist and anti-Semitic elements in the world, as well as those who deny that the Holocaust took place," they said in the letter.

By ignoring the Holocaust, the UN is taking a similar stand to that taken by the world when Jews were being wiped out during the war, they added.

Five Israeli suggestions did find their way into the resolution. The word "Holocaust," however, was rejected, in the belief that some non-aligned states would object.

The final language refers to the Jews without specifically mentioning them. The draft reads: "We bow our heads before the tens of millions of those who perished in their towns and villages, on the battlefields and in the death camps in a genocide."

Nevertheless, Israel did not oppose the resolution "because we understood that in order for it to be approved by consensus, as the Russians wanted it, everything in the text had to be universal," said one Israeli diplomat. No "horrors" could be "singled out" without triggering political conflict, he said.

In his remarks before the General Assembly, Yaacobi made specific reference to the impact of the Holocaust on his own family — more than 50 members of his family perished — and on the Jewish people and the State of Israel.

"For the State of Israel, the Second World War cannot be remembered without remembering the Holocaust," Yaacobi said.

"During their 12-year reign of terror, the Nazis directed special fury against the Jewish people," he said. "The Jews of Europe were dehumanized and eventually destroyed."

The U.S. ambassador for special political affairs, Karl F. Inderfurth, was among about a dozen other diplomats who delivered speeches on the resolution.

He paid homage to "the victims of racial and ethnic hatred, in particular those who perished in death camps and the Holocaust."

"We shall never forget their suffering; we commemorate their memory," Inderfurth said.

In his speech, Yaacobi also paid tribute to "the bravery and the heroism of the Jewish people" who resisted the Nazis underground and fought against them in national armies.

World leaders mark anniversary

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

UNITED NATIONS — Some 150 world leaders gathered here last Sunday to mark the 50th anniversary of the United Nations, taking the podium to call for world peace and cooperation and for states to pay the international organization's bills.

U.S. President Bill Clinton called for a global assault on terrorism, organized crime, drug trafficking and nuclear smuggling, in a speech that launched the celebrations.

Speaking to a packed General Assembly hall under unprecedented security, Clinton demanded an international response to post-Cold War scourges which he said "jeopardize the global trend toward peace and freedom."

Clinton's reference to the Middle East was not to the peace process, but to terror. He noted that "In Israel and France, hatemongers blow up buses."

Palestinian Authority Chairman Yasser Arafat, who was number 23 in a parade of speakers determined by lottery, said, "The history of the United Nations is intertwined with the question of Palestine."

The progress toward peace between Israel and the Palestinians had been based on Security Council resolutions and the principle of land for peace, he said. Further, the UN retains a legal, political, and moral responsibility to the Palestinians until they achieve self-determination and national independence, said Arafat, the only speaker to appear on the rostrum in military regalia.

He also noted that a number of critical items still remain on the Israeli-Palestinian agenda, including Jerusalem, refugees and the settlements.

Arafat said the Palestinians had "turned over a leaf" and envisioned a future in which "the Palestinian and Israeli people may live side by side in two independent states."

"I came to you 21 years ago as a fighter for freedom. Today, I come with a heart filled with love and peace," Arafat said, adding that a comprehensive regional peace must include the peoples of Iraq and Libya.

Due to what were described as logistical complications, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin did not hear Arafat's speech.

The other speaker from the region during Sunday's morning session was Jordan's King Hussein, the longest-serving head of state among the assembled dignitaries.

In a quiet speech, he said the Hashemite Kingdom was celebrating the first anniversary of its peace treaty with Israel, and that pilots from Israel and Jordan were flying their first joint formations last Sunday in honor of the treaty and their fallen comrades.

The king limited his references to strife in the region, although he said Jordan had suffered "enormously" from the wars that "led to the tragedy of the Palestinian people."

Arafat cracking down on terrorists

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

Despite its initial reluctance to do so, the PLO has begun to cooperate with Israel in cracking down on Palestinian terrorism.

And concurrently, Israel and the PLO are working together to induce Islamic fundamentalists to join the political process and abandon violence.

MIDEAST ANALYSIS

These are important developments for both sides.

If the Oslo agreements, and indeed his government, are not to wither on the vine, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin needs to show Israelis in no uncertain terms that peace and terrorism are incompatible.

In the two years since the Declaration of Principles was signed by Israel and the PLO, some 150 Israelis have been killed in terrorist incidents. Each killing has left a dent in the peace accords, threatening the viability and longevity of the Labor party government and bringing the Likud one step closer to power.

Yasser Arafat, the PLO chieftain and the head of the Palestine National Authority (PNA) based in the Gaza Strip, is also under immense pressure. If he fails to convince Israel that he is doing his best to combat terrorism, perpetrated in the main by Hamas, the consequences could be catastrophic for his vision of Palestinian self-determination.

Israel can slow or suspend the peace process. Israel can impose further closures on the West Bank and Gaza. Western donors, particularly the United States, can renege on their promises to assist the struggling Palestinian entity.

At first, Arafat made little or no effort to condemn and to deal with terrorism. He feared that he would ignite a Palestinian civil war and that he would lose his popularity.

But of late, as a result of several terrorist outrages perpetrated by rejectionists inside and beyond the Green Line, Arafat appears to have drawn the belated conclusion that terrorism is a two-edged sword which can irretrievably scuttle his dream of Palestinian statehood.

Buoyed by the prospect of taking control of still more territory in the West Bank as part of the Oslo 2 accords, Arafat has served notice that he will not tolerate Palestinian bombers and their fellow travellers.

He has rounded up would-be suicide bombers, arrested Islamic activists and closed, then reopened, newspapers.

Israel has observed Arafat's growing resoluteness with evident satisfaction. Following the Ramat Gan suicide bombing in July, Rabin went out of his way to praise Arafat's evolving steadfastness. And Israeli newspapers reported that the Shin Bet and the PNA's security services have been working in increasingly close and effective cooperation.

It is no secret, for instance, that Israel and the PNA have apparently pooled resources in a bid to hunt down Yehia Ayyash (The Engineer), the notorious Hamas bomb builder-cum-tactician.

Of course, Israel and the PNA have yet to form a full strategic partnership. For example: tension has arisen over the refusal of the PNA to extradite terrorists suspected or accused of murdering Israelis.

In the meantime, Israel and the PNA are trying to coopt Hamas.

With Israel's encouragement, the PNA and the Hamas leadership have entered into a dialogue which, if it succeeds, will produce a cease-fire under which Hamas would participate in forthcoming Palestinian elections and disavow terrorism.

Recently, Hamas officials from Gaza presented such proposals to their leadership in Sudan (a country ruled by an Islamic fundamentalist regime). The results were inconclusive, underlining the fact that Hamas is a deeply riven organization.

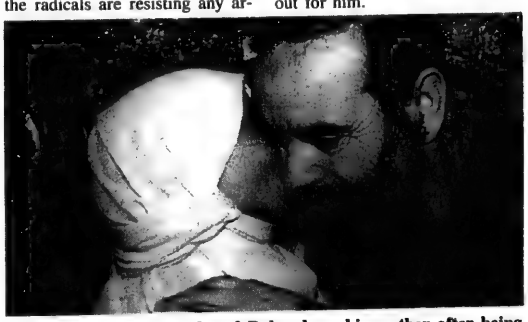
The moderates within Hamas seem ready to turn a new leaf, but the radicals are resisting any arrangement that recognizes the peace process, acquiesces to Israel's existence and accepts the dominance of Arafat's Fatah faction.

Nevertheless, the Hamas/PNA dialogue in the territories grinds on, having already borne one fruit: Hamas has pledged not to launch suicide attacks from areas under PNA jurisdiction. The PNA, however, is seeking a broader understanding whereby all assaults, regardless of origin, would cease.

In this respect, Arafat has the support of the jailed Hamas leader, Sheikh Ahmad Yassin, who has been languishing in an Israeli prison since 1989.

But ironically, Arafat lacks the backing of some of his own apparatchiks. Farouk Qaddoumi — the PLO's foreign affairs spokesman and an opponent of the Oslo peace process — has defended Hamas' right to stage "resistance operations" and criticized the PNA for cracking down on Hamas.

Clearly, Arafat has his work cut out for him.



Hamas leader Sheikh Ahmed Baher hugs his mother after being released from jail after four months of detention. The Palestinian Authority released Baher, Hamas' main spokesman in Gaza, in a bid to steer the Islamic group away from violence against Israel.

The Week in Israel

Oct. 16

• Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin made his third visit in five days to the security zone in south Lebanon. Hezbollah has killed nine Israeli soldiers in the past two weeks. Twenty-two IDF soldiers have been killed in Lebanon this year. Twenty-one soldiers died there in 1994.

Oct. 17

• A special cabinet meeting was held to discuss the situation in south Lebanon. The IDF reported that "mistakes" and operational flaws may have contributed to the deaths of the soldiers in south Lebanon. An investigation was begun.

Oct. 18

• Maj.-Gen. Ilan Biran, officer in charge of Central Command, met with residents of Efrat and briefed them on the details of the Interim Agreement. Several residents reported that Biran said the implementation of some aspects of the agreement would be difficult, but that the IDF will do its utmost to ensure the security of the settlers. Biran said that if construction of the Bethlehem bypass road is not completed by the end of December, Palestinian self-rule will only be established in the centre of the city.

Oct. 19

• Yediot Aharanot reported that Sheik Ahmed Baher, one of the leaders of Hamas, told the chief of the Palestinian Authority's (PA) security force that Hamas intends to halt terrorist attacks against Israel.

Oct. 20

• The Intel Corporation officially announced its decision to establish a new factory in Kiryat Gat with an investment of $1.6 billion (US), the largest in the history of the state.The government of Israel has agreed to contribute $600 million to the project. In three years, the new factory will reportedly begin exporting approximately $1 billion worth of goods annually. The factory will emply 1,500 persons and will create an additional 3,000 related jobs.

JERUSALEM 3000 EVENTS

• The Israel Philatelic Services recently issued a series of three special stamps commemorating Jerusalem 3000.

• Two thousand people were expected in Jerusalem for the Medpartenariat-Israel 1995 conference.

Cost of Israel's redeployment could hit $1 billion

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — As government and army officials continue to prepare for an Israel Defence Force redeployment in the West Bank — beginning this week in the town of Jenin — senior Israeli army officers have told the cabinet they expect the complete redeployment plan to cost double the planned amount.

Maj.-Gen. Ilan Biran, commander of a sector that includes the West Bank, told cabinet ministers last Sunday that the total cost of the redeployment, expected to be completed by the end of 1997, would hit $1 billion (US).

The revised estimate drew a sharp reaction from Finance Minister Avraham Shohat.

"I totally reject the amount of money that he talks about," Shohat told Israel Television, adding that the government and army had previously agreed that the cost of the redeployment would be $500 million.

In his efforts earlier this year to gain cabinet approval for his 1996 budget, Shohat had engaged in marathon negotiations with the defence ministry and Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin over the cost of redeployment, called for under the terms of the recently signed agreement for extending Palestinian West Bank autonomy.

Meanwhile, Biran and IDF Chief of Staff Lt.-Gen. Amnon Shahak told the cabinet that the redeployment plan was set to move ahead and that Palestinian elections would be held in the territories Jan. 20.

The redeployment from West Bank towns "will be completed at the end of December, with one exception in the case of Hebron," Environment Minister Yossi Sarid told reporters after the cabinet session.

Some ministers expressed doubt that the timetable would be kept.

Housing Minister Binyamin Ben-Eliezer said redeployment would be delayed if Palestinian landowners attempt to prevent the expropriation of land needed to build bypass roads.

The roads would allow Jewish settlers in the West Bank to avoid driving through population centres controlled by the Palestinian Authority.

Agriculture Minister Yakov Tsur told Israel Radio that keeping the redeployment on schedule depends on a number of factors, including the Palestinian Authority's ability to live up to its commitments to curb terrorist activities in areas under its control.

"It will also depend on [completion] of the bypass roads," Tsur said, "and making sure that the Palestinians prepare what is needed to run the elections."

Meanwhile, the army prepared for this week's pullback from Jenin, the first of six West Bank towns from which the Israeli army will redeploy completely by year's end.

The completion of the pullout could take until Nov. 10, Israel Radio reported.

Sovereignty's costs too steep

be beyond redemption, that overturning the existing order is the only option if fundamental values are to be preserved, that the provocations have been grave.

That is a hard case to make in the case of Canada and Quebec. Certainly there have been many issues which have grated over the past two centuries. Undoubtedly there has been a sense of historical grievance. But that sense of grievance does not correspond to contemporary reality, a situation where Canada is already substantially decentralized, where Quebec has made tremendous progress in rectifying past injustices and already enjoys an exceptional degree of control over many aspects of its destiny, where Quebec exercises influence in Canadian public life well out of proportion to its share of the country's population.

Moreover Canada, including Quebec, is recognized internationally as a superior place to live. Are these the facts on which a convincing case for secession can be built? It is evident that the leaders of the sovereignty campaign do not believe so. Rather they prefer to revive outdated struggles, to incite class conflict and ultimately to play the language and culture card. This is a strategy that will further enervate a society that is exhausted after devoting a quarter century to such activity.

The case for an independent Quebec is weakened even further when we take into account the impact that secession would have on Canada, on Quebec and on Montreal. The effects of the threat of a separate Quebec are already well understood by readers of this newspaper. The costs in economic and social dislocation of the achievement of sovereignty would be substantial, quantifiable and widely experienced. Weighed against the vague promises of how life in an independent Quebec would represent an improvement over the present situation, there should be no difficulty in deciding how to vote. Those of us who live in Montreal share an additional insight. The evidence of the decline of this city is palpable and easily visible to all but the most deluded observer. We have seen the future proposed by the separatists and it does not work!

Whatever its shortcomings, Canada, with Quebec as an integral part, remains a country with many virtues and strengths. As we approach the new century, the challenge for all Canadians is to build on them.

Canada melds unity, diversity

The name "Canada" is a Huron-Iroquois word meaning village or settlement. What is a settlement if not a place where people choose to live together, uniting for the widest, common good, respectful of one another, protective of one another, helpful to one another; where they try to find their fulfilment, cherish their traditions and their cultures, and with God's grace, where they are able to watch their children grow healthy and confident, long into their lives?

The "idea" of Canada, a political union almost 130 years ago of two nationalities, two languages and two cultures, forged through compromise and cooperation, has emerged on the eve of a new millennium, as a model and a beacon for the modern world.

Due in significant part to the evolutionary legacy of its founding ethos, Canada has begun to mature into a country which is seen and admired throughout the globe. Countless UN and OECD studies have stated thus. Countless tourists have commented thus. And a ceaseless stream of immigrants has proven thus.

What concerned the opponents of the Meech Lake accord almost 10 years ago, namely, the question of Quebec's distinct society, has since faded into the background. It is no longer an issue. The concern that the recognition of a distinct society would lead to a transfer of greater jurisdictional powers to Quebec has all but vanished. Indeed, as many commentators have pointed out, greater jurisdictional powers are being transferred to the provinces de facto as a result of frightening fiscal deficits and global economic pressures.

Where politicians failed, accountants may succeed!

Once again, life's great leveller, time, may bring down those legal and psychological barricades erected, behind which timid men once hid, resisting change and sabotaging accommodation.

The two founding peoples – and here we set aside for the purpose of this discussion, the role and contribution of the people of the First Nations – have been galvanized by the same historical forces, learning to contend with a vast, at times difficult, but always beautiful, life-giving land, its governance, its geography, its climate, its sheer size. Rather than surrender to the forces of separation, let us be bound by the strength and the force of this great and lovely land.

The vision of this expansive "settlement" we call Canada is confident, secure, safe, welcoming, outward-looking, open, truly diverse and tolerant. By contrast, the vision of the separatists is, at its core, inward-looking, focussed on self, closed, ungenerous and as many people fear, inhospitable to the "other."

Who are the timid men today?

We urge the people of Quebec not to follow their counsel. For Canada and Quebec.

Do you own part of Israel?

By CARL ALPERT
Special to The CJN

HAIFA — Do you unknowingly own land in Israel? Before you reply in the negative, read on.

There has been a great deal of talk lately about the estimated vast sums deposited by European Jews in Swiss banks prior to the Holocaust, which now remains unclaimed because the rightful owners have perished. In some instances, potential heirs know about the deposits but lack proper documentation to present their claims. We understand that the Swiss banks are beginning to adopt a more humane attitude in view of the special circumstances.

However, our attention has been called to parallel cases of unclaimed property — in Israel. Many years ago, we received a letter from the authorities in the town of Afula, often called the capital of the Emek, asking if we could help locate the owners of large tracts of land which had been pruchased by absentee Zionists.

In the 1920s and 1930s, there was a great campaign to sell land in Palestine to Jews overseas. Energetic salesmen travelled through the United States and Europe and convinced thousands of Jews to acquire title to plots of land, either as a manifestation of their Zionist idealism, or as a possible good investment. At the time, most of this land was located in the sandy wastes then on the outskirts of Tel Aviv, or on the rocky, uninhabited slopes of Mount Carmel, or in farm areas remote from towns or villages.

The prices were not high and in some cases, payment was made on the instalment plan. Men and women who contributed to the Jewish National Fund (JNF) and other campaigns for redemption of the Jewish national homeland were attracted by the idea of owning a plot in the Holy Land. They treasured the attractive, illustrated certificates printed in Hebrew and English, carrying their names. Most never came to inspect their property.

In the meantime, the country has expanded. Some of this property is now located in choice sites and is worth a great deal of money. Some, to be sure, remains undeveloped farmland. There are many cases where the original buyer has long since passed on and his descendants and heirs have no knowledge of the existence of property which could rightfully be theirs.

In many instances, the original owners sold the land, or perhaps contributed it to the JNF, but there is still a great deal of unclaimed property there. Subject to payment of back taxes, it is often retrievable. The local authorities are not to blame. In most cases, letters sent to the registered owners at the last address of record, have been returned. In many cases, while the name of the registered owner remains on the books, Israel's Custodian of Abandoned Property administers the real estate. Israel's laws governing bequests and legacies confer rights even on secondary and tertiary descendants like cousins, nieces and nephews who can provide proof of relationship when the more immediate heirs are no longer alive.

There are plots in Tel Aviv or in choice locations in plush Haifa neighborhoods, which contractors would pay a fortune for, but the owners or their heirs cannot be located. To be sure, there are also some cases where unscrupulous salesmen, preying on Zionist idealism, did not hesitate to sell the same plot to two or even three prospects, and then pocketed the proceeds. Fictitious ownership certificates were issued, but such cases are believed to be few in number.

The subject of back taxes may be troublesome, especially when compound interest and currency linkage is taken into consideration. But for land which has remained undeveloped in rural areas, even the accumulated taxes may not be formidable. Land which has been administered by the Custodian on behalf of the missing owners may have accumulated a sizeable credit balance from rents which have been collected on buildings erected thereon.

What we write of plots of land may be equally applicable to flats in old residential buildings in large cities. Here in Haifa, we know of a relatively large number of old flats which are officially recorded as "abandoned."

So, hunt around in grandpa's old files, if you still have them. You may be the owner of a choice plot on Mt. Carmel, or across the street from the Afula Opera House.

From Canada we find on old lists the names of Leon Heilig, Max Held, Akiva Katzenelson, Abraham Levin, Louis Lipovski, Joseph Magid, Moshe Slonim and Max Miller of Montreal; Louis Friedman of Toronto; Max Miller of Lachine; Jacob Samuel and Leon Freifield of Edmonton; Max Frieman of Vancouver; Yosef Dubitzki of Calgary.

Three caballeros launch baseball at U of T

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — At the University of Toronto, "build it and they will come" has given way to "organize it and they will play," thanks to the efforts of three baseball-loving students.

Brett Massey, 21, Jonathan Ruby, 21, and David Naiman, you guessed it, also 21, have brought competitive intercollegiate baseball to U of T for the 1995 season.

If they were entrepreneurs, they could take credit for filling a market niche and being on the ground floor of an up-and-coming business, but as U of T students, the three have merely found an outlet for their tremendous love of the game and the desire to be hands-on participants in a baseball venture.

Working under the auspices of the Canadian Intercollegiate Baseball Association (CIBA), they have pulled together dozens of loose strings and fielded a team in only a few short months. They recruited the players, found the coaches, solicited corporate sponsors and publicized the team to any who would listen.

The inauguration of the U of T Blues earlier this season marks the first time in 88 years that the university has fielded a varsity-calibre baseball team. From 1880-1907, the university sponsored a team, but that tradition died and was never revived.

Until now.

The Blues, technically a U of T club, play in CIBA's West Division along with Brock, Durham College, Guelph, George Brown and McMaster. The East Division includes three Quebec universities plus Queen's and the Atlantic Division sports five Maritimes teams.

Last fall, in the league's inaugural season, only four teams participated and McGill won the championship with a 6-1 victory over McMaster.

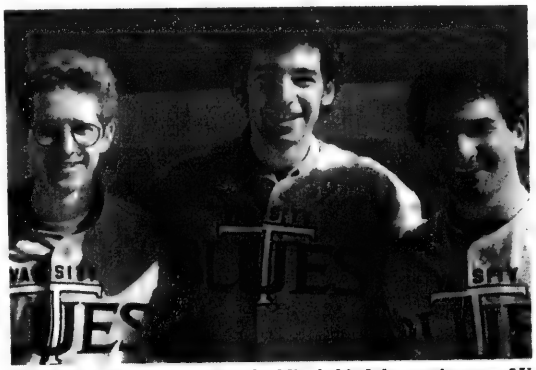
It was while visiting friends in Montreal that the troika learned of the new league and pondered bringing an expansion team to the U of T.

The idea took shape in May when they decided to take the bull by the horns, run it up the flagpole and see if it would fly. They approached Skip Phoenix, the U of T's club director, who agreed to give the team club status along with the right to use the "Blues" name and logo.

They recruited Toronto Maple Leafs (of the Inter-County Baseball League) veteran and two-time MVP Rick Johnston as head coach and longtime East York coach and player Andrew Green as assistant.

Working on a shoestring budget, they publicized the team by pasting up 500 posters during frosh week. About 60 hopefuls showed up on each of four days of tryouts and eventually the roster was pared down to 20. Most are "graduates" of the Metro Toronto League, the city's premiere baseball circuit.

Proving there's no favoritism involved, none of the three caballeros made the team. "We know we're not good enough," admits Massey, a history/political science major and, more importantly, a 14-year veteran of house league and all-star teams in the Thornhill and North York leagues.



Singing the Blues are the three buddies behind the renaissance of U of T baseball, (from left) David Naiman, Jonathan Ruby and Brett Massey.

While they don't get to hit fast balls, chaw tabacca and field grounders, the three can be seen pacing the sidelines at the team's home games at Stan Wadlow Park in East York.

Some of the night games call for thermal underwear, they're so cold, but the players "will do anything to play," said Massey.

With the fall weather compressing the schedule, the team plays 15 games in slightly over one month, with the championship game slated for Oct. 28 in either Toronto or Montreal, Ruby said.

In the meantime, the three students are enjoying the games and learning about running a business. Massey serves as VP in charge of marketing, Ruby, who's studying American politics, is director of player personnel, and Naiman, an accounting student, serves as president and director of finance.

Next year, with the league due to undergo further expansion, the three are hoping to find a home field closer to the university, improve on corporate sponsorship and recruit even more on-field talent.

It's a project they expect to continue until they each graduate, and perhaps by then the team and the league will have proven so successful, the Blues will be granted official Varsity status at the university.

Jewish alienation examined honestly

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Is American celebrity artist Jonathan Waxman a nogoodnik or is he ahead of his time in recognizing that Jewish assimilation is tied to the way the media handles high-profile Jews?

You may or may not find the answer to this in the fascinating play Sight Unseen running at the Studio Theatre, Ford Centre, until Nov. 12, by New Globe Theatre. But along the way you will experience scintillating dialogue in the Donald Margulies play produced by Janese Kane and directed with a deft hand by Al Waxman, no relation to the artist in the drama.

In fact director Waxman sets the tone for a cerebral night of theatre with an introductory note:" ... I believe each of us ... arrives at a juncture when and where we need to go back and see again that which we never saw before."

Sight Unseen moves back and forth effectively from the present to earlier days in the artist's life. Besides Waxman, the other characters include his former lover, Patricia, now married to Nick, an English archeologist. The other character is Grete, a blonde and aggressive German journalist, whom Waxman accuses of Jew-baiting.

Though the two scenes comprising the interview between Waxman (Jack Langedijk) and Grete (Barbara Radecki) at a major London, England exhibition of his work, are sandwiched between major scenes, they do contain the play's real message. Pay close attention!

In a way, Sight Unseen tackles the problem of Jewish alienation more honestly than do novelists Philip Roth and Mordechai Richler. Though you may condemn Waxman for abandoning Patricia (Ann Turnbull), his "sacrificial shiksa", and, many years later, deserting the shivah for his father in Brooklyn, to attend the London show, you must acknowledge his growing sense of Jewish identity.

All the actors handle their roles with professional competence. As the doughty Englishman, Nick, Victor Ertmanis gets most of the laughs in a play that has a surprising amount of humor, considering its subject.

Ann Turnbull and Victor Ertmanis in a scene from Sight Unseen.

The sets are clever and intriguing, but the small size of the theatre does not allow enough distance between the crowded stage and the audience. This is particularly evident in the prologue where the New York painting studio confronts the theatregoers like a set from Sesame Street.

Koor Plans Private Allocation

JERUSALEM — Koor Industries, Israel's largest industrial group is planning a private allocation to 35 Israeli institutional investors as part of its first global public share offering. The offering is scheduled for the middle of November.

The company plans to raise about $110 million(Cdn.). The proceeds are expected to expand the company's business and help the conglomerate invest in acquisitions abroad.

According to the draft prospectus, Koor will offer about 60 per cent of the shares on the American market and the remainder worldwide, mainly in Europe.

Eye on Arts

by Bill Gladstone

Sun Rises on Sunset Boulevard: As the Billy Wilder-Andrew Lloyd Webber confection Sunset Boulevard opens in North York, courtesy of Livent Entertainment, it is fitting to recall that Wilder, born in Vienna in 1906, was one of the fabled Jews who invented Hollywood.

Wilder established his box-office credentials through such masterful and memorable works as Double Indemnity (1944), The Lost Weekend (1945), The Seven Year Itch (1955), Some Like It Hot (1959), The Apartment (1960) — and of course Sunset Boulevard (1950). According to the New York Times, the elderly writer-director was "delighted" when Lloyd Webber's stage version of the film noir classic opened in Los Angeles two years ago.

"In the beginning, I was afraid they'd completely reverse the whole thing. But they didn't. In fact, I told them maybe they stuck too close to the screenplay. Maybe they should have moved a little farther away from it."

Sunset Boulevard tells the story of Norma Desmond, a dethroned movie queen who tries to make a comeback to the big screen and encounters tragedy. The film, which opened at New York's Radio City Music Hall in August 1950, received rave reviews and grossed $166,000 the first week, then a record high.

So far, Livent's production has not inspired accolades and hosannas. But the theatrical megaspectacle has had a history of drawing popular acclaim without critical acclaim. Despite mixed reception by drama critics in both London and Los Angeles, it has enjoyed profitable runs in both cities.

Jewish Fare at Intl. Festival: Two performances of Else, a play by award-winning Israeli playwright Motti Lerner and directed by Miriam Goldschmidt, are set for Nov. 3 and 4 as part of the Why Theatre international theatre festival in Toronto.

The play portrays the last phase in the life of the German-Jewish writer, Else Lasker-Schuler (1869-1945), who left Nazi Germany for Switzerland, and made aliyah in 1939, when the play begins. Sponsors of the festival include David and Ed Mirvish and Lufthansa German Airlines. Helen Gardiner Phelan Playhouse, U. of T. 416-978-1504.

Shaare Zedek Art Show: An art show and sale is slated for Sunday Nov. 5, 1 to 6 p.m. at the home of interior designer Miriam Muller, 246 Hammerstone Cres., Thornhill. Artists represented include Toronto-area artisans Al Green, Gena Tenenbaum and Misha Frid, whose sculptures are regarded as national treasures in his Russian homeland. Proceeds go to the new Woman and Infant Centre of the Shaare Zedek Hospital, Jerusalem. Donation appreciated.

U.S. offers free trade to autonomous Palestinian area

JERUSALEM — U.S. trade representative Mickey Kantor held talks with Israeli officials last week to iron out details of a free trade zone in the autonomous Palestinian areas that will match those of the 10-year-old U.S. accord with Jerusalem.

Kantor said the decision for reciprocal duty-free treatment for Palestinian and American products "is not an agreement between the U.S. and the Palestinian Authority, [but] is a unilateral step" meant to help the economic aspects of the peace process.

He said the aspects of the duty-free arrangement is that both Palestinians and Americans provide free access to each other's goods; third countries cannot use either side to benefit from the freetrade zones; and the Palestinians do not help the Arab economic boycott of Israel.

Kantor said he did not expect congressional opposition to the Palestinian free trade zone, despite legislation in the House of Representatives that would link American aid to the Palestinian Authority honoring its agreements with Israel.

Israel's Trade and Industry Minister Micha Harish said he supported the U.S. decision for a free trade zone in Gaza, Judea and Samaria. He added that the accord would only bolster Israeli-Palestinian economic cooperation, given their accord to charge an equal customs rate.

Special to The CJN

Job Search is a monthly column by job search consultant Lisa Galet. Readers should forward any questions to The CJN.

So much of the time, resumes sent in response to a job advertisement do not garner a response. If a response is received, often it is a rejection letter. Here are tips to getting a more positive response or a better result from your efforts.

When you send in your two-page resume, do not try to cram those pages full of information. In my business, I have seen hundreds of resumes which need a magnifying glass to decipher. The more time it takes me to read a resume, the less I need to meet the person described, in order to decide if I know of a job placement opportunity for him or her. Surely an employer scanning resumes would feel the same way. If the purpose of the resume is to entice the reader to meet the person being described, then these resumes fail.

The winning resumes use wide margins, bold headings, indentations or bullets to emphasize points that deserve attention. They are written in point form. They keep adjectives and adverbs to a minimum and stay away from three- and four-syllable words. They state name, address and phone number but omit age, place of birth and state of health. They don't detail the work done 20 years ago, but do describe the five main tasks of the more recent jobs. They are on plain white paper. They may have a business card attached to a corner with a paper clip. The best ones indicate the type of work the job seeker is looking for (which shows respect for the resume reader who may have 50 resumes to get through in the space of 15 minutes).

To make sure your resume gets the best attention, send it only when you have a good chance of getting a response. There are many unadvertised jobs for which competition is scarce and your resume is more likely to be noticed. Look for job postings in community centres, organizations sponsored by United Way, the Toronto Centre for Career Action and Times Change. Add to these information you get from calls to employers who are competitors, suppliers or buyers of the place you used to work for. When you call, speak to the person who would supervise the section you could work in. Ask about a current or future opportunity for someone with your skills.

For the best notice, call someone before you send a resume. Tell him or her to expect your package and then hand address the envelope so it is personalized. Say in your attached cover letter you will contact this person in 10 days and then call.

Employers are much pickier these days about the people they are willing to hire; so make sure the words you use, verbally and in writing, deliver a really good impression.

May the New Year bring a good deal of luck and prosperity to all of us.

Holiday travel guides

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

The summer is over, but vacation planning never really ends. If you're still in the process of choosing a holiday destination, particularly in Europe or Asia, dip into the following guides. They're yours to discover.

•Britain (Raincoast, $27.95) offers a traveller data on England, Wales, Scotland, Ireland and Northern Ireland. It's a fact-filled book with 200 maps and numerous color photographs. Read it from cover to cover and you'll be an instant expert.

•Cheap Eats in Paris (Raincoast, $14.95) and Cheap Sleeps in Paris (Raincoast, $14.95) are tailor-made for budget tourists. Author Sandra Gustafson has a discerning eye and knows her way around this glittering capital.

•Prague (Raincoast, $17.50) is a pocket-size book ideal for a rainy day or for a rest stop at a cafe. It's composed of 11 graceful essays written by such worthies as Franz Kafka, Josef Skvorecky and Milan Kundera.

•Western Australia (Raincoast, $17.95) will appeal to readers who seek the unusual in far-off lands. Isolated by forboding deserts, this region offers sand, surf, ghost towns, wineries and forests.

•India & Bangladesh (Raincoast, $18.95) takes the form of an atlas. And what a great atlas it is! The maps are simply superb. This volume, obviously, is for travellers who have already arranged their itineraries.

Dear Jesse,

My mother refuses help of any kind. She is 87 years old and lives alone. I worry about her all the time but I cannot always be at her apartment to make sure she has enough food in the house to eat or if she is taking her medication as prescribed. I have a full-time job and three teenagers living at home. I'm exhausted. I'm over at mother's apartment at least three times a week and have her over for dinner at least once every weekend, either Friday or Sunday night. Mother seems a bit confused, yet she doesn't want CLSC help nor will she let me pay for someone to come in to help her with the shopping, banking and keeping her company. What do I do?

Mrs. J.

Dear Mrs. J.,

Your exhaustion is perfectly understandable, like many other adult children caregivers in our society, you are juggling several roles and a hectic schedule, along with the responsibilities for your aged parent.

Your mother's confusion should be investigated. Consult with her physician and have him/her discuss this process with your mother.

CLSCs often contract with caregivers in sensitive circumstances when, for example, care receivers are uncomfortable about the financial aspects of available services. There are also organizations which provide volunteers to assist the frail elderly with shopping and banking, in addition to offering friendly visiting to help combat the isolation and loneliness.

As for you, please consider joining an adult children's caregiver support group such as that offered by JSSE. Series featuring weekly meetings with other caregivers provide an outlet for feelings such as guilt, frustration and anger, while offering coping strategies for dealing with such natural reactions. Guest speakers offer educational and relevant "food for thought." You owe it to yourself and your loved ones to nurture some of your own needs. After all, a more relaxed and informed caregiver benefits everyone concerned.

Readers are invited to send any questions they have for Jesse to The CJN. Jesse is the executive director of Jewish Support Services for the Elderly (JSSE) in Montreal.

Wedding receptions, parties proliferate in Toronto's most elegant dining room

When the Kekkas brothers opened Byzas in January, it was not with the prime intention of hosting private parties, but to offer Danforth-goers the kind of cosmopolitan, elegant dining environment that would embody the spirit of the Danforth while transcending it by opening up new culinary vistas.

Dining room seats 200

The flood of special occasion bookings that ensued "just sort of happened," says John. "The day after we opened I had two inquiries about bar mitzvah parties, and it just took off from there." Customers captivated with the ambience of the dining room — which seats 200 comfortably and defies comparison with any other, in Canada at least — apparently have seen it as an opportunity to avoid the sameness of banquet halls. "There are many wonderful banquet facilities in Toronto," says Kekkas, "but most of them have a similar look and feel." Byzas' appeal to party-goers and simcha-makers lies in its hybrid personality and "landscape": using a compelling mix of design elements, it combines the spaciousness of a banquet room with the quaintness and intimacy of a bistro. "We wanted to create a magnetic environment with movie-star appeal," Kekkas shamelessly admits, "but price our menu within anyone's reach." Indeed, the moderately-priced gourmet fare has enjoyed such popularity to date that some clients simply order à la carte at their functions rather than arranging a special menu, though of course that option is available.

Obviously, major functions such as weddings involve closing the restaurant to the public, which Byzas reluctantly does as needed on Sundays and selected weekdays.

Kosher catering available

Clients who prefer kosher functions can book the premises and work with a kosher caterer of their choice. Regardless of the type of cuisine, Byzas has already hosted affairs for certain members of the community so renowned that they cannot be mentioned in this space — though, as you'll see below, some Hollywood celebrities are far less camera-shy!

You don't have a simcha every day, so trust someone who does.

You don't have a simcha every day ... if you did, it wouldn't be a simcha, now would it?

So when you do have a special occasion to celebrate, who better to turn to than a Kosher Caterer who does have a special event in the works almost every single day?

At Regal Kosher Caterers, we've gained a reputation of caring for our clients. Our Catering Manager Joanne Katz has been arranging successful functions for 15 years. If she hasn't done one for you yet, chances are she's done a relative's or a friend's.

Joanne will co-ordinate your affair to make it unique and outstanding. You can count on her to leave no stone unturned in the pursuit of excellence.

Regal Kosher Caterers offers superb cuisine under the supervision of the Kashruth Council, Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto (C.O.R.). For your everyday dining, a full-service Glatt Kosher restaurant (King Solomon's Table) is located right on the premises. King Solomon's is also available for your smaller functions (up to 120 people) on Saturday night or Sunday morning/afternoon.

One...two...three... SAY CHEESE!

By ERIC LAYMAN
Special to The CJN

In a competitive business like photography, where anyone who wants to do so can set up shop, how does one identify the true professionals?

If care is taken providing food, drink, music and atmosphere at a party, equal care should be given that which endures: the video and the photos. Budget accordingly, urges Arnold Machtinger of Photos by Arnold (905-881-6372). Give photography the budget it deserves; treat it as an essential.

Neither Machtinger nor Sim Posen of Capture the Day (512-9271) will quote prices on the phone.

"If you don't like the work and it's free," says Machtinger, "it's still too expensive."

He adds that "people buy from people," and that attention to the client counts as much as technical expertise. As costs can range from a few hundred to a few thousand dollars, one should compare the price asked by different photographers for the same work.

The first thing to do is meet and get aquainted with a potential photographer. Only face-to-face contact lets the photographer show his expertise and his portfolio. If this meeting goes well, most budget problems can be worked out.

No two photographers are alike; each has a distinctive approach. Rather than bring people to the studio, for example, Posen strives to "capture the elegence of everyday life," in settings where his client lives and works; and Machtinger offers instant mementoes of a moment at a party, in the form of small shots which can be worn on a key chain.

Taking pictures is only part of the work. Service is just as important. Service builds the referral network that makes for long-term success.

Machtinger lists his goals as (a) productivity, (b) customer service and (c) making money. He says, "If I look after (a) and (b), (c) takes care of itself."

If he can't do a job, he simply says no. While this has lost him some work, it has earned long-term respect for his honesty and thus helped build that referral network.

Everyone agrees that the photographer should be unobtrusive; he should take his pictures, remember that he is in his client's territory and get out. Let the only complaint be: "There are so many good shots, it's hard to choose."

The photographer should know the state-of-the-art technology; but at present, the older technology is better for parties. Digital technology is still too slow and expensive. The best professional, says Posen, learns innovations through practical work with them. Only thus, for example, will he learn what he needs to use to photograph a candlelight service without using flash. What matters is that the equipment be of good quality, and easy to use.

Moreover, Posen emphasizes, the photographer should not try to plan every aspect of a job in advance. Much of the fun for both him and the client is in things happening spontaneously; and an all-round, versatile approach, which is not too specialized, is best suited to deal with this.

Essential as technical knowledge is, respect for the client's wishes is equally important. The best professionals have what Sim Posen calls "a balance of rapport and expertise."

Food Glorious Food

By ERIC LAYMAN
Special to The CJN

Both David Lazar of Rose Lazar Catering (416-633-0344), and Miriam Myerowitz of Miriam's Table (416-633-6554), agree that for any party to be a success, good food is essential. This being so, the choice of a caterer is vital.

As one of the "stars of the show," the food must be of the best quality. In Myerowitz's words: "Never feed anyone something you wouldn't eat yourself." It should both look and taste delicious; a good chef pays attention to appearances. Not only must it be fresh and well prepared: each course must come on time, neither too soon nor too late. And while the food must "star," the logistics behind its appearance must be invisible.

Myerowitz observes that over the past few decades, food preferences have changed a great deal. Eight-course meals are no longer the norm, even at important functions; and while this is partly a result of the economy, it also reflects the fact that people are more health-conscious and more "choosy."

Quantity alone can no longer impress them. As more people lead a life which does not force physical exertion on them, they exercise more, but eat lighter. Instead of all three of an appetizer, soup and salad, for example, they tend to want only two of these, or even one; and instead of red meat, they often choose chicken or fish.

One major question is: what is the track record of the caterer I'm thinking of hiring? Experience counts for a great deal; so do versatility and good response to a crisis. The larger the function, the more probability something unpredictable will happen. Lazar cites examples of an outdoor function where, unexpectedly, there was no water or electricity, or events where speeches went on so long that there had to be a delay in serving a course.

In-house caterers who have a hall of their own, but also cater other locations such as homes, hotels or outdoors, are perhaps liable to be more adaptable than exclusively in-house caterers. On the other hand, because in-house caterers have their facilities at hand, they may have fewer problems with logistics.

Nowadays, Lazar points out, most synagogues have an in-house caterer. For an in-house caterer, look at the size, layout and atmosphere of the location. Is there enough space? Are parking and other facilities easy to get to? Will your guests feel comfortable here?

A good caterer has rapport with the host, and works well with the other professionals at an event. He also has plenty of contacts in other fields. If something goes wrong — say, if the flowers are delivered to another location — the caterer is often expected to step into the breach, even when the problem is not strictly his responsibility.

Hiring a caterer also requires being clear on what type of food you want, and what your budget can reasonably handle. While you have to spend some money in order to get quality, a good caterer takes pride in offering quality food even for a moderate budget.

Credibility comes from maintaining high standards, even when not all prospective clients insist on them. "I will not take on a function," Lazar states simply, "if it leads to my being discredited."

Choose experienced videographer

By ERIC LAYMAN
Special to The CJN

Choosing a videographer for your simchah should not be left to the last moment.

Because a good video will capture the event and keep its memory fresh, the videographer should be chosen with great care.

One factor to consider is experience. Andy Koltai of Video Occasions (905-737-6800) has over seven years' experience. Fred Nelson of Spotlight Productions, an offshoot of Fred Nelson Associate (905-886-3210), has been a videographer since 1974. These full-time professionals offer many insights into how to select a videographer.

Quality equipment is important. Koltai, for example, uses a Panasonic three-chip high-resolution camera, giving the edited version of the video shown on the home VCR the quality of a broadcast tape. Anyone who is not a video maven can still look for certain technical features like remote control light operation and cordless microphones, which help the videographer be unobtrusive.

"There but not seen," should be a slogan all good videographers live by.

Many videographers offer something to enhance the pleasure of the simchah. Spotlight, for example, offers a kind of puzzle for bar and bat mitzvahs. They start with a black-and-white picture of the baby, which is blown up to two by three feet. Then a picture of the child today, in corresponding dimensions, is cut into pieces like a jigsaw puzzle. Guests are given these pieces, which they then lay over the earlier picture. Putting the puzzle together can be a scene in the video.

The major factor, of course, is the person behind the camera. A good videographer is a technician, but more than that a professional. He is good at working with other professionals like photographers, but above all, he is responsive to the client's wishes and the atmosphere of the event (knowing, for example, when to wear a suit and tie and when to dress casually).

Special effects are fun, but the main purpose of the video is to capture the feeling of the event. Here, says Spotlight's Shirley Nelson, sentiment has its rightful place. As she puts it, the client is the star in his own video.

For the videographer to know what the client wants, the two must meet and establish a rapport well before the event. At the outset, Koltai shows clients a demo tape which offers an overview of his work, including special effects.

Koltai guarantees that the client will get the finished video within 60 days of the event — if he gives the videographer the photos, invitation card and other materials to be included in the video before the event. He insists that there is no such thing as booking too early: six or eight months in advance is not too soon.

Nelson advises calling the videographer as soon as the event is scheduled or as soon as the hall or restaurant is booked.

PARTY PLANNER

Decorations make a wonderful impression

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

First impressions are important and nothing makes a better impression than when guests walk into a professionally decorated party.

"Decorations set the mood and the moment guests arrive at a party they feel that mood," says Tammy Goodman, owner of Artistic Creations (905-508-8193).

Goodman, 23, who has been in the business for almost two years, says she specializes in creating theme parties such as sports, tropical, music, suns and stars or anything else her clients have in mind.

"Everything is theme related, from the invitations, placemats and sign-in boards to head table signs and stand-up characters."

One of her favorite parties was decorated around a basketball theme. "I had 40 different stand-ups of players with their actual silhouette. They each had on a tank-top with their team logo and we had a large tank top at the head table. The give-away was a tank top with "I slam-dunked at Daniel's bar mitzvah" printed on the front. The guests loved it.

"Other themed give-aways could include T-shirts or mugs with the bar or bat mitzvah child's name on them. Adults want to take home these things as much as the kids and they get as excited about them."

Goodman says she does not have one basic price because she can tailor-make her decorations according to her client's budget.

"I love to decorate. So I can be creative and do a beautiful party on a low budget. My most important consideration is that my clients are happy."

Before she begins each job, she presents clients with a full color presentation, but they do not see the finished product until they arrive at the party.

"It is fully set-up and decorated before they come. They're just thrilled when they see it," she says.

Bella Zaidel, owner of Perfect Pieces (905-731-7695) is one of four certified balloon artists in Ontario and she specializes in decorating with good quality helium or air balloons.

"That certification means I get a lot of corporate work, bar or bat mitzvahs and weddings. I can work within any budget and I find that using some balloon sculptures or arches really brightens up any room.

"I find it exciting to decorate a party around a theme, because it can carry right through the party. Even a color or shape theme such as stars or rainbows adds a lot to the decor. I've done a Mexican theme, complete with traditional blankets and bales of hay, or a western theme, in which I decorated the room with cacti, cowboy hats and stand-ups of cowboys wearing bandanas."

Zaidel uses a lot of flowers, lighting and fabrics in her work, and especially for weddings, the three combined can create a romantic, elegant atmosphere.

"Fabrics can be draped on the tables and walls. Pillars adorned with floral arrangements are scattered throughout the room and candles create a warm glow. Imagine what that adds to the atmosphere of the wedding," she says.

PARTY PLANNER

Just call him Mr. DJ

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

Imagine surprising your guests by having paparazzi snapping their pictures and shouting their names as they arrive at your party.

If the hosts desire, dancers could meet the guests in the lobby and dance them into the dining room. Depending on the party's theme, animated characters could lead guests to their seats.

Those are only a few of the things possible when you hire Mister Disc Jockey Show (905-886-4488), owned and operated by Edwin Allen Productions.

"We specialize in interactive entertainers. Whatever they do, they include the guests and make them part of the entertainment. Whether the hosts have decided to have dancers, disc jockeys or the fun-a-maniac entertainers, they reach out to the crowd and reel them in for the fun. Of course, we never force anyone to get up against their wishes but we have found that most guests are thrilled to perform," says Edwin McMurtry, who owns the company with Garth Riley.

McMurtry says, in terms of value, the Mister Disc Jockey Show "falls somewhere between a band and a disc jockey. There is a gap between record changers and live bands and we fill that gap. We come dressed in formal attire and we stand out on stage like entertainers. Every booking is treated like a performance.

"We can also work along with a band so that both acts complement each other. We work seamlessly so when a band ends on one song, we pick up the same song and in turn, we finish with a song the band can jam in on. We are both concerned with making your party great. So we work together to do just that."

He says the Mister Disc Jockey Show uses only professional audio equipment in order to achieve "a full, big sound instead of a loud sound. We usually take up to two hours to put audio equipment into a room before a show, and we have spent almost a whole day before we did a show in a hockey arena. In that case, we brought our own stage, put in carpeting, lights and a plexiglass podium."

He says the Mister Disc Jockey Show specializes in props and choreography, and performers have come dressed like the Village People, the Beatles or any number of musical groups.

"We've found that people like to watch the performers at first, but then after awhile, they are itching to get up on stage. One of the favorites is getting up on stage with the entertainer, dressing up like one of the Village People and belting out the perennial favorite, YMCA. Some of our entertainers are expert line dancers and teach the guests a few dances."

Those who want a little more than singing and dancing can have the Fun-A-Maniacs organize games such as the Great Canadian Rock Challenge or a cross dressing relay.

"They are able to bring out the people and really get them going. They bring the crowd along to the height of participation.

"A live camera that films people as they enter, dance or mingle can be played back during the evening and the people eat it up. They just love seeing themselves on screen. We bring in a nine by 12 screen with finished trim so it looks entirely professional. A Speak Your Mind corner could have guests saying something about the bride and groom or bar or bat mitzvah child," says McMurtry.

He says what impresses people when they attend a Mister Jockey Show party is the "boundless energy of the entertainers. They are up there dancing and performing and making sure everyone is having a good time. They work hard at being entertainers. People cannot help but be drawn into the fun."

McMurtry stresses that they are flexible and can work within any budget. "We can tailor a show to whatever our client can afford. We have done an elegant show for $600. We are only as good as our last show and we work hard to make sure everyone is pleased."

PARTY PLANNER

Turning the ordinary room into something quite extraordinary

By ERIC LAYMAN
Special to The CJN

No two party rental services are alike. Mary Bien of Chair Decor (905-731-9217) stresses that the decor is part of the atmosphere; Dennis Higgins of Higgins Party Rentals (241-8564) wants his contribution to a party to be "so well done, it doesn't stand out."

Chair Decor rents chair covers, bands for the covers, bows, linen, accessories like napkin rings, silver plates to go under the dinner dishes — in short, all the things that can make a setting beautiful. The purpose, says Bien, is "to turn an ordinary room into an extraordinary setting."

A good visual impression, Bien points out, helps start an event off well. This impression will not only stay with the guests throughout the evening; once captured in photos and video, it lasts forever. For a small percentage of the cost of an event, you can create an enduring effect.

Moreover, the eye is a gateway to the heart. If the setting is special, guests feel special being there. They want an inviting ambience, especially at the dinner table, where they will take more notice of visual details because they are sitting still.

Higgins Party Rentals is an all-round service, renting furniture, linen, tableware, cooking appliances, fuel, stages, tents, light and sound equipment and even coat racks. In order to supply every party need, Denis Higgins keeps a huge inventory.

While he also considers his service to be part of the ambience, his focus is more on making things functional.

"In my business," he says, "we tend to be judged by our faults." Therefore, not to be noticed is as good as praise, he believes.

Higgins likes to hear that he helped a party be a success — after the event is over. He sees his business as cooperative, rather than competitive.

"If you want something and we don't have it," he says, "we'll get it for you."

Versatility is a factor to think about when choosing a rental company. For example, does a rental service offer furniture to accommodate aged or disabled people? Can it deal with outdoor events? A related factor is the company's track record. Who do you know who has used its services? What do they say about it?

Bien and Higgins agree that a party rental service must be good at working with other professionals like party coordinators, florists and caterers. Punctuality, timing and organization are as essential as the quality of the linen or furniture.

Higgins compares the timing for a party to a bus schedule — it's necessary not to be ahead of time, but to be on time within minutes, neither early nor late — for example, if you bring out the ice too soon at summer garden party.

Bien's advice on booking echoes that of almost everyone who serves the party circuit: book as soon as you know the date of your party or function.

Chair Decor is busy all year; even though things slow down a little in January and February, there are many corporate events then. Besides, more and more people are holding a party or other event at this time, to get a break from the "winter blues."

TOP TEN PARTY TIPS

By LYNNE ELKIND
Special to The CJN

TOP TEN PARTY REQUIREMENTS

10: Budget — a budget that will allow you to accomplish your function in the style that you can be comfortable with both financially and emotionally.

9: Book facility — be it a hotel, banquet hall, synagogue, home, building.

8: Arrange for a caterer — make sure all hidden costs surface i.e.:
* staffing
* bar
* rental equipment-stemware, flatware, china, tablets, chairs.

7: Photographer/video — these are in short supply and book up quickly
- these are keepsake for a very special day.

6: Get invitations — caligraphy envelopes
- calligraphy seating cards (if required seating plan)
- organize reply cards
* invitations to be sent out 6 weeks ahead for out of town/ 4 weeks for in town.

Use a professional

5: Plan decor — best to use a professional — impact upon entering the room sets the mood for day/evening.

4: Entertainment — book ahead to be assured of date needed. Depending on the occasion live bands are very popular and the combination with disc jockeys could please and provide much enjoyment to all your guests.

3: Clothing — depending on the type of affair you are having it is still appropriate to rent formal wear — they have a variety of current styles.

2: Food — make sure all final details are attended to. Don't forget about the entertainers and photographers.

1: Most importantly — relax, enjoy and have fun. Remember this is a celebration not a punishment. If you follow all the above steps, all should go well.

DODICK: Judaica Designs

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

In April 1992, Michele Dodick painted her first ceramic piece.

She was an employee of B.B. Bargoons at the time and brought in one of her pieces to show the decorators. "The next thing I knew I had an order for 250," Dodick said.

She began to sell her handpainted giftware, tableware and accessories to friends, at private shows and through a studio/showroom at Designers Walk.

People requested Judaica pieces in her trademark bright colors and through word of mouth her handpainted "funky" menorahs, seder plates, mezuzuah covers, kiddush cups and Shabbat candles became some of her most popular pieces, she said.

Last May, Dodick opened Dodick International (416-481-2328), her storefront studio and gift shop at 561 Eglinton Ave. W.

Dodick produces a new collection of tableware and giftware every year along with the Judaica items which continue to be some of her best sellers. She is also exporting Judaica items to 12 Judaica stores across the United States, as well as to the gift shop of the Jewish Museum in New York City.

"The reception that the American stores have had to the Judaica was exceptional," she said. "There's a hunger out there for Judaica. Gifts of the Judaic tradition will be part of peoples' lives. It has meaning. People want to give gifts with meaning."

Dodick, 33, said she learned about design and color working at B. B. Bargoons. "I noticed people wanted functional items that were artistic to grace their homes."

Flipping through a home design magazine one day, she saw some painted ceramics on the cover. "From the pit of my stomach I knew it was something I had to do," she said.

Dodick's patterns for Fall 1995 are a harvest pattern in earth tones — plum, hunter green and coral red, and a dinner for two scene, in jewel tones — rose, blues and purples.

She likened the Harvest collection to a Judaica pattern, because it has grapes and pomegranates, two of the seven biblical species. "It reminds me of Sukkot," she said.

Dinner for two is a Matisse-inspired picture of a romantic table setting for two, with candles and stars.

Platters, salad bowls, vases and matching serving sets are available in both patterns along with Dodick's classic patterns. Items can be personalized for gifts. For example, the name of the bride and groom and date of the wedding can be inscribed at no extra charge.

The large platters cost $100, small ones are $50, salad bowls are $90 and vases are $90. Small gift items start at $12.95.

The Judaica items can be wedding and engagement gifts, and she has customized kiddush cups with personal inscriptions as gifts to bridemaids, ushers and the parents of the bride and groom.

The prices for the Judaica pieces start at $35 for a kiddush cup and go as high as $150 for a large seder plate with individual removable bowls. The menorah and smaller seder plate cost $90 each.

The price includes free gift wrapping in clear cellophane with lots of ribbons.

Fit for kings

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

Last April Garry Zaidlin, co-owner of Accurate Limousine Service (460-5732), was driving his new Excalibur when he was stopped by a policeman.

He said he "panicked a bit" when he pulled over to the side of the road. But in the end it was Zaidlin who booked the cop ... for his wedding that is. "The policeman stopped me just to see the car," Zaidlin said.

He's been getting a lot of attention since he began driving the Excalibur six months ago, his co-partner Marcy Grossman noted. During the summer he was flagged down by a film director who booked him and the car for a television commercial, Zaidlin said.

"People have never seen anything like it," Grossman said.

The white, 28-foot Excalibur with black and gold trim and burgundy leather interior seats nine passengers. "The car is a boat on land," Zaidlin said.

Inside there is a television hidden in the upholstery. Push a button and it rolls out. An extra door at the back allows for photographers to get good shots of the people riding in the car.

The main use of the car is for weddings, but he encourages people to use the limousine as a gift service for birthdays, anniversaries, Valentine's day, even for picking up mothers and newborns from the hospital.

Recently a couple got engaged in the Excalibur, and the car has also been used for bar mitzvahs, he said. "The boys go nuts when they see all the toys. They try the TV and the stereo."

The basic rate for the Excalibur is $125 an hour with a two-hour minimum. The stretch limousine is $65 an hour. Black is very elegant, especially for galas, Zaidlin said referring to the Cadillac.

Wonderkids gym is a lot of fun

Three-year-old Sarah Dyman swings from a colorful parachute attached to a bungie cord. Evan Silverstein, 5, does flips on the trampoline; his brother Leigh, 8, hangs upside down from the rings while his 3-year-old brother, Matthew, climbs in and out of a large multi-colored foam pyramid.

These kids were trying out the equipment at an open house at Wonderkids (905-881-8499), a gymnasium and indoor playground for children with party facilities.

On weekdays Wonderkids, now in its third season, offers a variety of recreational gymnastic classes supervised by professional teachers and certified coaches. Acrobatics classes are given by a former member of Cirque de Soleil and several advanced classes are taught by the former coach of the Canadian men's olympic gymnastics team.

On the weekends it's party time. Wonderkids, which has seating for up to 45 children, has become a popular venue for birthday parties for children two to 12.

The basic party, which lasts 90 minutes, includes pizza, pop, juice and a designer cake. The cost is $150 for 10 children and $9 for each additional child. Children can play on the equipment or have a structured gym class.

The centre is the brainchild of Eugine Galperin, who set up Wonderkids, located at 34 Doncaster Ave. #9. He designed all the equipment and coaches some of the advanced classes, but it is his daughter, Vicki Galperin, 27, a phys-ed teacher with a degree in education who runs the place.

Back at the Wonderkids' open house, another young consumer is testing the equipment.

Marina Aptekman who just turned nine, doesn't need any sales pitch. Her mind is already made up for next year's birthday. "I'm definitely going to have my birthday party here. This place is a lot of fun." –B.S.

PARTY PLANNER

And the bands played on...

By ERIC LAYMAN
Special to The CJN

In choosing the band for your simchah, experience is a key factor. Michael Danso has led the Michael Danso Band (684-7992) for 3½ years, but his experience includes playing in Hair, Jesus Christ Superstar and pop concerts with symphony orchestras.

Led by Kenny Simon, the Hourglas Orchestra (638-2549) has been playing since 1970. Larry Lupescu, who heads the 1836 Orchestra (667-1836), has been a band leader for 19 years.

Although bands often specialize in a particular kind of music, Lupescu thinks a combination of versatility and "focus," or specialization, is part of what makes a band musically good and pleasing to an audience.

"At a simchah, as on the public stage," says Danso, "professionalism pays." Professionalism means having good music, a good rapport with the clients and the audience, as well as with the other professionals working at the event, and the ability to lead and organize. Danso has put together two successful shows: White Tie and Tails, featuring the works of George Gershwin and Duke Ellington; and From Harlem to Hollywood, with the music of Harold Arlen and Cole Porter.

Simon adds that running a band is a full-time job. The proverb says: "He who pays the piper, calls the tune."

A band plays to please — even including tunes written by the client, says Simon. At the same time, to please the audience, the band must enjoy playing. Simon finds room for creativity in interpreting a song, for example in an instrumental solo. The Hourglass Orchestra, is a dance band first and foremost.

Hire the band as far in advance as possible, advises Danso, who now has bookings into 1997. Simon says eight months to a year, even a year and a half in advance is not too early. Lupescu says that bar mitzvahs are booked one to two years ahead and weddings six months to a year. Lupescu's band, the 1836 Orchestra specializes in chassidic music.

All three band leaders refuse to quote prices over the phone. Remember, though, that working time includes not only practice and playing, but up to four hours to set up and dismantle equipment. For a good-sized band of six to nine people, doing everything live with no pre-recorded tracks, anywhere from $700 to $1,400 per hour is reasonable. Lupescu points out that while professionalism is a major incentive, so is money, and that music should be treated as an essential part of the simchah.

No matter how good the band, you don't know if it's the one for your simchah until you hear them and see them in person. Only then can you talk to the leader and look for details like whether the equipment is in good condition, and whether the members are well groomed.

Lupescu, though he has his own repertoire, takes requests, but prefers to get them before the event. Simon advises hosts to consider their guests' taste, and to make a request list — not of all the songs to play, but enough to give a general idea. To satisfy the client's wishes, says Danso, the band leader must know exactly what those wishes are.

Perhaps Simon sums it up best, when he says that a band has to have "harmony" — musically as a team and with the client.

Choosing a band should not be a rash decision. Remember, perhaps more than anyone else involved, a band can make or break your party.

Flowers of the world

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

Take a bare room, add some flowers or floral arrangements and the room is instantly transformed into a party room.

"Flowers can go along with any color schemes or can just add some spot color to a room. They are versatile, beautiful and add a festive atmosphere to any party," says Tuula Kivinen, owner of Flowers of the World (440-0077).

"Because flowers come in such a rainbow of colors, brides can choose arrangements to enhance any color theme they've chosen," she said. Whether it's purple, pink, black and white or autumn shades, there are flowers to carry through the scheme. Later, at the reception, the flowers will match the table coverings and room decor. They add something further to any decorations already in the room.

"We often work with decorators to go along with the party's theme. We can place crawling ivy around hockey sticks or tiny flowers in the centre of a tennis racket — in other words flowers fit in anywhere, whether the party is formal, casual or in between."

Flowers of the World really does carry blooms from almost every part of the world, including Holland, Ecuador, Colombia, Florida, New Zealand and Australia.

"Hydrangea are west-coast fall flowers that come in shades of blue to burgundy, and carnations come from Colombia. Many roses now come from Ecuador, and amazingly, there are 50 to 75 different colors of roses, in shades of red, pink, yellow, shocking blue and lilac. Mixing complementary shades of roses adds beauty and elegance to the party.

"They dry very well so they can be kept as a memento after the party. Hang them in a well ventilated, dark, dry room until they are dry and they will last indefinitely. I have done a room in dried flowers, but the look is more subdued. It creates a different atmosphere than fresh flowers.

"Flowers do the trick in any room. There is no such thing as a budget that is too low, because we can always find something that will add a festive mood to the room. When a dinner table is set with a tablecloth, cutlery and serving pieces, the addition of a floral centrepiece turns it from a plain dinner table to a festive dinner table."

She advises clients to try and come in at least six months in advance so they can work together.

"We show them photographs and describe what can be done with the budget they've chosen."

PARTY PLANNER

Your presence is kindly requested...

By RUTH SCHWEITZER
Special to The CJN

Artist and art teacher Ruth Donsky Schwebel has been creating beautiful hand-designed invitations, ketubot, certificates, commemorative messages and menus for 30 years.

"I've done many kinds of invitations for parties," Schwebel, of Folio Calligraphy (416-733-9086), said. She stressed that simchah invitations are part of the whole visible picture of the event.

When she is working on invitations — for weddings, bar and bat mitzvahs — she either designs the lettering herself, finds historical lettering through research of illuminated manuscripts or uses a contemporary typeface.

Her hand-lettered invitations, along with optional reply cards, are camera ready. She also provides printing, embossing and envelope addressing if desired.

Schwebel's ketubot, based on designs found in illuminated manuscripts, are made of authentic materials, such as parchment, and painted with the same colors used in medieval times.

"What I find most satisfying," she said, "is researching historical lettering and integrating it into my designs." Her intricate designs are all produced by hand because "a computer doesn't know how to set it up."

Schwebel put herself through university — she has a PhD in political science — by working as an artist and calligrapher. She has a discerning clientele who love authenticity, historical colors and designs. He work, she said, "reflects good taste."

Cooper-Geffen has a special interest in invitations. As the owner of The Invitation List (905-764-1371), she helps her clients to select the perfect invitation from the many she offers.

Folio Calligraphy

Available in traditional and modern styles, in various types of paper and in all colors of the rainbow, the invitations can be custom designed. Many bar and bat mitzvahs have themes, such as sports, music or dance, so organizers usually request illustrations on their invitations.

"They add their own personal touch that fits into the theme and tells a little about the child," she said.

Her simchah package includes invitations, envelopes, reply cards and place-setting cards. Party organizers decide whether they want the entire package or if they wish to eliminate certain items. For example, instead of reply cards, the request to RSVP can be added to the bottom of invitations.

Along with invitations, Cooper-Geffen offers thank you notes, guest books, party favors, balloons and serviettes.

When she meets with clients, she discusses the wording of their invitation.

A newsletter for your day

BY JOSEPH SERGE
Supplements Editor

When planning a wedding or any other large party, one of the biggest problems you'll face is playing host to all sorts of people, many of whom barely even know you.

With this in mind when planning her own wedding, Amy Singer launched ClubWed Press (416-463-3391), a newsletter telling her guests all about herself, the wedding party and the town they were having the simchah in.

"The newsletter exists to tell your story on your wedding day," Singer said. "An invitation is just a little snapshot – this is us and this is where the wedding will be – people don't know how you met, your history or who the bridesmaids are, and you can't go introducing everyone to everyone else."

The ClubWed Press newsletter does just that on a two-sided personalized newsletter. It features information about the couple, how they met, how he proposed, who the guests of honor are and just about anything else you'd want to mention.

Particularly helpful for out of town guests is a map showing where the event is taking place and some information about the town ie. restaurants to visit, list of shuls, and what's going on in town that weekend.

"The newsletter makes you the best host or hostess you can be. It tells guests what's going on in the city that weekend since most people from out of town stay at least a weekend.

"I have lots of fun doing this," she says, "and the couple shouldn't have to worry about doing this all themselves."

Singer stresses the newsletter doesn't have to be just for weddings. It's perfect for just about any large function be it a graduation, a bar or bat mitzvah or an anniversary.

Singer's own wedding was held in Chicago and 90 per cent of the guests, she said, where from out of town. "I got nervous before the wedding and that's when I thought of doing this," she said. Since she was working in direct marketing at the time, she used the direct marketing approach and mailed out her newsletter two days after sending out the invitations.

Her newsletter contained information on who she and her husband to be were, interviews with the wedding party and a list of things to do and places to vist in Chicago.

Singer gets her information by meeting the prospective clients and having them fill out a questionnaire asking such questions as who proposed and how, and where the couple will be honeymooning.

"I make sure they take their time with the questionnaire, leaving it with them for about a week," she said since they should get everything important down.

Singer does some research on the town the simchah is taking place in and uses the questionnaire to match the couple's needs with restaurants and events she considers appropriate for the guests to visit.

She can match the newsletter to your color scheme, coordinate styles with your invitations and include photos if necessary.

Fifty double-sided newsletters cost just over $300. For a bit extra she can include other things like a special paper stock or sound chips which convey a message from the hosts when opened. If needed, Singer also does the handling and mailing.

Because she has a laser printer she can keep printing costs down and is able to print odd numbers to specification.

Singer requires at least one month's notice. Although she can do it quicker if necessary.

Consultants alleviate the strain

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

The engagement is announced or the bar mitzvah booked and you just don't know what to do next. Enter the party consultant.

Heidi Gruenspan (905-738-5030) says a consultant can guide a family through every step of the party preparation from booking a hall and choosing the invitations, through to dressing the bride and orchestrating the actual event.

"A consultant alleviates the strain of planning. I can suggest photographers, florists, bands — all the trades, but I make sure to give clients a choice. I never recommend just one person. It is up to my clients to make the final decision."

Gruenspan charges one basic price for her services, which can include such things as attending consultation meetings, choosing suits and gowns or going to the florist. "I am always available by phone or in person to help out in any way I can."

One month before the simchah, Gruenspan is in touch with all the other professionals to finalize details, and a week before she puts together a minute-by-minute schedule of the big day.

"I coordinate everything — when makeup is applied, when the photographer begins shooting, when staff eats, when speeches are made — anything that should happen is on the schedule.

"I remain at the affair from the moment the bride gets dressed until she throws her bouquet, and I can deal with any problem that arises. I was with one bride who was so nervous she started hyperventilating. I had her breathe in and out, and talked to her until she calmed down.

"Another bride had a lipstick stain on her gown, which we removed with stain remover and baby powder. At one party a guest spilled spaghetti sauce on her dress; so what we did was remove a large flower from another part of her gown and sew it over the stain. She was thrilled."

Her trusty suitcase

Of course, none of these quick fix-its could be done without her trusty suitcase, which contains items such as men's socks, pantyhose in every size and color, electric tape to tape wires, needle and thread, makeup and diaper pins.

At a bat mitzvah, Gruenspan often has to keep an eye on the kids to make sure they are not disruptive. "That is something the bar mitzvah parents should not have to do on this special day."

Debbie Simon (398-2899), a party consultant and special events coordinator, who is enrolled at a special events course at George Brown College, specializes in working at the rehearsal and the affair. "I meet with the family initially to assist them if they need referrals and then two weeks before the rehearsal, we make up a schedule of the day's events."

Simon also attends the wedding from the time the bride has her makeup done and remains until the bouquet and garter are thrown.

"I often have to do a lot of refereeing, between a bride and her mother, divorced parents or siblings and step-siblings. What I do is calm them down, separate them and then stress that the day is for the bride and groom and everyone should put aside their differences and enjoy."

She stresses that it is important for a consultant to be at the party at all times to deal with anything that crops up, but she must also blend in with the crowd.

"It is an important mix of being there but not being prominent."

Get rid of bad hair

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

Do you have more bad hair days than you care to think about? Shelley Elnekave, owner of Shelley's Hairstyling (489-3100), can help you put your bad hair days behind you.

Elnekave specializes in problem hair. He said he has spent many years researching hair products and discovered the use of amino acids "that help restore chemically broken bonds in damaged hair." He also developed low-acid perm- and hair-coloring products that condition rather than damage hair.

"The natural pH level of hair is five. Regular perms and hair coloring raise the pH level. The higher you go, the more damage will occur," he explained. "I concentrate on lowering the pH levels of my perms and colors to less than pH five, which makes them a treatment for hair."

Elnekave is president of the National Academy of Hair Design and teaches his methods of preparing perm and color products to hairdressers all over the world. He said many of his clients with problem hair are referred to him by other hairdressers.

Elnekave studied hairstyling in Israel and Paris. But his training in Paris came to an abrupt end at the beginning of the Six Day War, when he rushed back to Israel to join his tank crew on the front lines, he said.

He came to Toronto to do hair shows for L'Oreal at Holt Renfrew in 1969 and ended up staying in Toronto. He set up his own shop in the Cedarvale area and three years ago he moved his shop down the street to 504 Eglinton Ave. W. near Avenue Road.

For basic hair care Elnekave advised the use of shampoos that are pH-balanced. "Most shampoos are alkaline — detergents — which strip the hair of its natural oil. You can wash hair daily if you use the proper shampoo."

Elnekave said hair should be cut every three to four weeks to maintain its shape. "If you keep the hair at the right length all the time it needs to be trimmed at least once a month."

Hair styles for fall '95 will be more defined — mid- to moderate length — with blunter lines and shorter fringes, Elnekave said.

For thin hair he recommends style support coloring — different tones of color — which creates the illusion of volume. Perms are not just for curls, but can be used to give height and volume to hair. This year large curl perms are the trend, he said.

Colors are "shiny and bold as opposed to flat and brassy," Elnekave said. "Chestnut brown is hot. Blonds and reds are translucent — several shades are combined together with brighter colors used around the face."

Shopping made easy

By ERIC LAYMAN
Special to The CJN

When you receive an invitation to the wedding of a distant cousin, your first question may well be: "But what should I buy them?" The purpose of a gift registry is to make it easy to answer. Or, if you are receiving gifts, the registry helps you get what you want, with no duplications and no "white elephants."

Both Ellis Chitiz of Deblin's Linens (416-782-2910) and Brenda Johnston of Eaton's Gift Registry (416-343-3779) agree on the major advantage of using a gift registry. As the recipients have already said what they want, the guests do not have to worry about what to buy; all they have to do is decide how much they want to spend.

There are exceptions, of course, in those people who know the recipient well, and choose their gift accordingly. Functions like weddings, though, seem to entail longer and longer guest lists as time passes; and the larger the party or function, the more guests there will be who barely know those for whom the party is held.

Consequently, more and more people use registries for weddings, birthdays, baby showers, anniversaries, bar or bat mitzvahs and other occasions.

Chitiz stresses the advantage of linens as gifts from people on a wide range of budgets: while china, for example, is always expensive, linen prices range from $5 for a pack of 12 dishcloths to $300 for a down duvet. Linen, moreover, is both useful and beautiful — an important factor, since it enables one to satisfy those who like useful gifts, and those who prefer things chosen for their beauty.

Eaton's Gift Retistry offers, in contrast, a chance to find everything under one roof, in the diversity of a department store. Eaton's makes an immediate computerized update within moments of every purchase, eliminating any chance of duplication. Anyone who comes in receives an updated list of what has not been bought, what it costs, and its purchase number. Also, Eaton's service is national. For many people, these are decisive advantages.

Johnston admits that there is an advantage to using different registers, one for linens, one for china: the host of the function can exercise more control, and make sure that gifts come from a specific source. Anyone making this choice, however, has to accept that more control means more work.

In this as in other aspects of preparing for your simchah, there is no such thing as too early; registering six months ahead is not too far in advance. for linens in particular, because designs change, don't delay too long in buying, advises Chitiz. A sheet design lasts about a year, and good designs have a lifespan of four to five years; longer is an exception.

About individual companies' registries, the best way to find out is to call and ask — or better still, drop in and look at the store and what's on the shelves. Return policies, for example, vary from no-return to "goods satisfactory or money refunded;" and ultimately, you know best what you want.

Mandell Entertainment: INTERACTIVE FUN

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

When Corey Mandell was 17, he accompanied a friend, a part-time DJ, on a job.

The next week he was hired by the DJ company. "It was the perfect part-time job," he says, because he enjoyed entertaining an audience. After his first booking, three or four people requested him specifically, Mandell says.

"I was more interactive with the audience. I had to figure out what to do while the tapes were being changed. I started doing comedy and interviewing people," he says.

"People liked the fact that the DJ was interacting with them. I definitely started the interactive DJ style in Toronto," he claims.

He soon decided to go into business for himself. Today Mandell, 25, heads the Mandel Entertainment Group (905-886-4000), one of Toronto's largest entertainment companies. Besides providing DJs, Mandell offers party planning and decorating services.

30 bookings a week

The company, now in its fifth year, averages 30 bookings a week. Approximately 70 workers are on subcontract: 40 DJs, 20 dancers and a decorating staff, in addition to seven full-time employees.

In its first year, the company had a rostrum of seven DJs and averaged two to three parties a week. The number of parties has doubled each year.

Renee Birnbaum joined the company in its first year of operation as a partner in the decorating division. "Her work was excellent and in the right price range. We produce all our own decorations," Mandell says.

With 50 per cent of clients choosing a DJ-decorating package, the decoration division generates one-fifth of the company's revenue, he notes.

Mandell promotes the company rather than individual DJs, he says. "As soon as you let a DJ become too big, you lose the focus of the company. That's why we've built up a company of equals."

The DJs are subcontracted at different wages, depending on the individual's level of experience, he says. He also insists that his DJs follow the company's behavior and dress code and they must be prompt.

Mandell says he works "an eight-day week. It's a 9 to 9 job Monday to Friday. By the time you meet the customer at night, it's 9 o'clock. You're working Saturday and Sunday, sometimes Fridays. I can do up to five parties a weekend."

While bar and bar mitzvahs provide the main source of revenue for Mandell Entertainment, the company also gets more than 100 bookings a year for corporate and special events, he says. "Some corporations heard about us through the grapevine and took a chance on us. We've held on to those contracts year after year."

Through advertising packages with some radio stations, various companies sponsor afternoon dances run by Mandell Entertainment at junior high schools.

Give something back

The companies get exposure for their products in the target market — DJs distribute samples — as well as a radio advertising spot. Mandell gets the chance to promote the company and to "give something back to the community," he says.

One of the biggest promotional events Mandell ran was a video show for an audience of 10,000 at the Kingswood Concert Theatre at Canada's Wonderland last May.

Although he was a drama major at York University, he left the program. But his entertainment business gives him plenty of opportunity to act every weekend, Mandell says.

Professionally planned parties

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

Sylvia Younan of SAS Party Planning and Supplies (490-0410) said her friends couldn't understand why she left a career in hotel management to start up a party-planning business.

She switched careers nine years ago at a time when party planning was uncharted territory. "I took a chance and it worked perfectly," she said.

Younan specializes in party decor for bar/bat mitzvahs, weddings, corporate parties and promotions. People always want something different, she said.

At one recent bat mitzvah at the Inn on the Park, she created a tree of life out of balloons, and for the candlelighting ceremony she had the guests who lit candles also put leaves inscribed with special messages on the tree.

Younan said she's able to provide some unique decorations and she prides herself in taking care of every last detail — even the pen on the sign-in board at bar and bar mitzvahs is integrated into the decor.

Younan always asks for and sticks to the budget.

She sets up the dance floor with decorations and props, arranges balloons in columns and arcs that fit the theme and uses lighted balloons.

Karen Garscadden and Karen Jacobs run Up and Coming Events, (905-886-8148), a party planning company now in its eighth year.

The two women handle weddings, bar/bat mitzvahs, special birthdays and anniversaries, charity functions and corporate events such as grand openings, company picnics and staff incentive and appreciation gatherings.

The Tree of Life by SAS Party Planning and Supplies.

"Before the crunch at the end of the '80s there were lots of high profile promotional events." Garscadden noted. "Now we're starting to see a resurgence. People are starting to party again.

"[But] they want a lot more bang for their buck. We have to be more creative. We want the impression to be good. We cut corners behind the scenes."

Up and Coming Events recently coordinated a wedding weekend from chartering buses to pick up the 150 out-of-town guests at the airport to preparing the gift baskets in the hotel rooms to arranging a prenuptial dinner for 190 people at the Ontario Science Centre.

For bar and bat mitzvahs Up and Coming Events orchestrates traditional candlelighting ceremonies, along with party planning for the children.

She said she and Jacobs plan events for all budgets and they are always out scouting new locations for original parties.

According to Garscadden the most important part of her job is being present at the affair. "I attend to all the details on the night of the party so the host and hostess can feel like a guest at their own party."

At Party Packagers customers can pick up a list to help them shop better.

ONE STOP SHOPS: No need to shop around

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

People who juggle families, jobs and anything else that happens to be on their plate, do not have the time or inclination to run from store to store in order to prepare for a party. That is where the one-stop party shop comes in.

Mel Grevler, owner of Party Supply Depot (905-764-5457) says he tries to supply people with as much as possible at the fairest price, "so they know that everything that needs to be done to prepare for the party can be done right here.

"They get invitations, paper products, loot bag items and decorations. And they can order balloons in one of several ways. They can rent a tank and buy the balloons, buy ready-inflated balloons, consult with us and do the decorating themselves, or they can have us come in and do a full and comprehensive decorating job."

Grevler says he can assist customers to work with a party theme and he can work according to any budget.

"We can provide sign-in boards, paper sculptures, stars and moons — anything they want. We also provide favors to enhance the party such as glo-sticks, tambourines or inflatable instruments. We like to feel part of the excitement and we know that kids love to dance around with inflatable guitars or saxophones. People's natures seem to transform when they have an instrument in their hands."

He says he aims at providing good quality products at the cheapest possible prices. "We go out of our way to find novel products that will not force people to spend beyond their budget. Come in, tell us the age group you're working with and we'll find you something great."

Brian and Cathy Seetner, who own Party Packagers (631-8455) along with Howard Mandel, says their store is geared towards customer convenience.

"We have a well-organized, assisted self-service store that makes shopping very easy. Our knowledgeable staff is always near but never on top of customers. They happily walk customers through the store, but there is no high pressure," Cathy says.

Customers walking into Party Packagers can pick up a party list to help them decide where to begin shopping or for use as a reminder of anything they've forgotten.

"A proper list really makes for an organized shopping trip. People in a hurry want to come in and get out fast," she says.

Stock at Party Packagers is plentiful, from paper products, invitations, wrapping paper, serving pieces, plastic or paper cups to loot bag items and toys.

"We have over 2,000 loot bag items to choose from and everything is organized according to age and sex of the child. Our toy department has many items for those who need gifts or one large item for the loot bag. We also prepare loot bags for $5 a child. As holidays approach, such as Chanukah, the store carries the appropriate wrapping paper and invitations," Cathy says.

As one of the pioneers in the one-stop shopping stores, Cathy says Party Packagers helps to fill a definite niche. "People have less leisure time, parties are becoming more elaborate and they have less money to spend. We help people save time and money."

Lingerie alters fit of gown

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to the CJN

The wedding gown has been chosen and fitted, but without the proper undergarments, it will probably have to be fitted again.

"It is important to have the undergarments you are going to wear under your gown when you go for your first fitting. A gown just does not fit the same if you change what you're wearing underneath," says Rachelle Pollari, who, with her huband Sam, owns Amandalina's Bridal Boutique (905-856-8680).

She says that depending on a woman's size and the cut of her wedding gown, she can recommend lingerie that will complement what she is wearing. "A bustier for a low-backed gown goes just to the midriff and serves the dual purpose of lift and support. Those who want to appear smaller may want to wear a body suit that can whittle inches off the waistline. A full-leg body suit holds in the thigh and calves.

"Many brides wear a one-piece corset that is particularly suited for a full skirt. There really is no question that lingerie can alter the fit of any gown." says Pollari.

She advises clients to buy the gown and undergarments in the same shop so everything can be fitted together. It is frustrating to bring in the lingerie, only to discover it doesn't fit well under the gown.

"We carry a full line in our boutique so we can save brides and their mothers time and aggravation."

Antonia Haney, owner of Pink Orchid Lingerie (905-886-1965), says that women benefit from shopping at a lingerie boutique because they get the service that "is just not possible at a department store. It is especially important for a girl who is buying her first bra to be properly fitted.

"Lingerie can be altered but generally we have a large enough size range to fit every body type — short-waisted, long-waisted."

She suggests clients wear black lingerie under black and dark colored clothing. "Navy blue can rub off on a white bra and make it dirty-looking. Skin-tone lingerie can be worn under any color and is the best color to wear under white because the bra lines do not show. White, especially in the summer, is very fresh looking under light-colored clothing.

"European women often want to show off their lingerie under see-through clothing so they choose a white bra to wear under a white blouse. In North America, we are just starting to wear matching bras. Colored solids and prints are starting to become important."

For those evenings at home when flannel pajamas just won't do, Haney carries loungewear and pajama sets in a range of materials from cotton and wool to silk and blends. "The merry widow, a one piece lace suit with garters, is an excellent choice. It can be matched up with a polyester or silk long gown that is also laced trimmed and a matching cross-over wrap."

Proper care of lingerie is not difficult, says Haney. "Wash by hand or in a gentle cycle and lay flat to dry. That is the only way to keep it looking like new."

Makeup enhances beauty

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

It comes as no surprise that makeup artist Marla Baker (789-7191) loves to do makeup for weddings and bar/bat mitzvahs. Baker grew up in the cosmetic business. Her mother, Caryl Baker, founded Caryl Visage Cosmetics, one of the largest local cosmeric companies.

Marla has been working in the family business, where she has a number of administrative responsibilities and teaches at the Caryl Baker Visage School of Cosmetics.

But for the last 15 years Baker has also been moonlighting as a makeup artist on weekends.

"I have a passion for makeup artistry. It's the creative end of the business," she said in a recent interview. "A wedding is very rewarding."

Baker offers a free consultation or trial makeup session to brides. She charges $50 per face — the price includes a lipstick — on the day of the affair.

Most brides don't want too much makeup, she said. "They want to look good and glamorous, but not too made up."

The makeup is necessary for the pictures which make people look paler than they are, Baker said. She added that she layers the makeup to last a long time, yet the bride will still look natural.

She always tries to please the bride or makeup wearer, she said. "I start out lightly. If you go heavy, it's hard to reduce the color. A lipstick shade in the tube can look different on everybody."

Being a makeup artist is like being an artist with a canvas, Baker said. "The clean face is like the canvas. You see an image just like an artist and you enhance it with color and contouring.

"You enhance a person's beauty by playing up their best features and subduing those features they're more self-conscious about. You're giving people confidence. You're helping people feel good about themselves. And that's very rewarding."

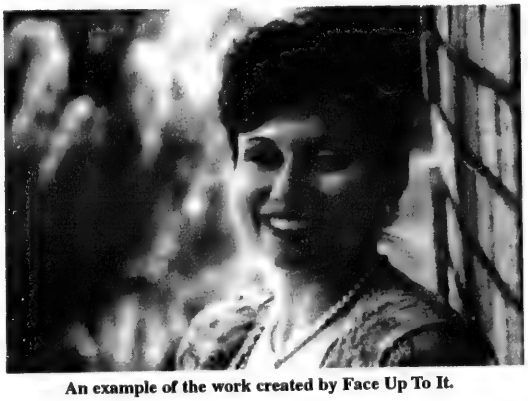
Makeup artist Arlene Sheffel learned to put on makeup when she played in a band. She always loved doing her own makeup; so she went back to school to learn how to do it professionally and started her company, Face Up To It (905-660-7695).

Sheffel studied at Caryl Baker's Visage School, learning skin care, theatrical and photographic makeup. She specializes in wedding and bar mitzvah parties, doing people in their homes and getting them ready for the photographer, she said.

Sheffel charges $40 a face and also gives a free consultation to the bride. "I do them free of charge a few months ahead so that they can see what they're going to look like," she explained. "The last thing I want is for the bride to be unhappy with the way she looks on her wedding day."

Sheffel agrees that brides generally don't want a lot of makeup; they want to look natural. She said she does do makeups for bat mitzvah girls and photographers sometines request it, but she applies very

Sheffel also teaches people how to put on makeup. "It's easy to do once you know how to do it." And you don't need a lot of makeup, she said. "People buy so much makeup. They don't need it."



An example of the work created by Face Up To It.

They should update their look and change with the season, she recommended. "You shouldn't get in a rut."

Sheffel's beauty advice: moisturize the skin and never use soap because it dries the skin.

She also offered an age old beauty tip: don't forget your beauty sleep. "Get plenty of rest. It makes a big difference to the skin, she said. "Sleep makes the skin look a lot better."

Clothes make the man

By ERIC LAYMAN
Special to The CJN

Clothes, says the proverb, make the man. Originally, this referred to how the wearer impressed others, and to how his appearance affected his self-esteem. Today, there is an added shade of meaning. Formal clothes must not only look good: they must also feel comfortable.

You are going to wear pants, jacket and vest for several hours. If they fit well, and you like the way you look, you will feel good in them — which will affect how you relate to the people at your party.

Comfort is largely a matter of fit; and as Leonard Goldstein of Freeman Formal Rentals (416-288-1919) points out, companies vary in this factor. They also vary in the two other aspects of comfort, fabric and fashion.

Ask if all sizes, even and odd, are on the shelves. Rental companies carry adjustable pants; for example, a size 31 waist can be taken in to size 30, or let out to 32. Many companies, however, will not carry 30 or 32: their next size down might be 29, which can adjust upward to 30 or down to 28.

A good rental company, says Goldstein, will carry all sizes, with adjustments possible in each. As no two individuals — and no two men with a 31-inch waist — are built alike, pants with the right waist might be too loose or tight in the seat or thighs, or not right in leg length. If all sizes are available, problems like this are easy to solve.

Similarly with jackets: a jacket should not simply match the trousers, but both should match the customer. Most men, for example, have roughly a six- or seven-inch difference between chest and waist; but there are many exceptions. And because the shoulders cannot be altered, the jacket must be tapered or let out in the hips.

A formal rental company does not offer custom tailoring, which is another line of business. What it should offer, though, is made-to-measure tailoring to fit the customer.

Aside from fit, there are fabric and fashion to consider. Gone are the days when "formal" meant "heavy;" lighter, more comfortable fabrics are in. Ask the rental company if they have these fabrics, and the facilities to care for them.

As to fashion, there is no longer one "in look." While the old-style formal wear is still there — and plenty of people like it — there is also the option of making the formal look closer to the natural look, "the real you." A good formal rental company will offer you these alternatives. This is why a good formal rental company will carry both two- and three-button tuxedos, for example (along with plenty of accessories, from top hats to shoes).

Before you make a decision, make a visit. See what's on the shelves — how much of the company's space is devoted to alterations — and how adaptable they are to today's freedom of style.

3-D videos an art form

By ERIC LAYMAN
Special to The CJN

Is there such a thing as instant success? Zoran Karapancev, president of ABC Video Productions (416-265-8313), says "the real truth is — No."

There is an illusion of instant success when a new star suddenly appears on the entertainment or cultural horizon, or when a new product is suddenly available and popular everywhere. The audience or customers grasp at once that something new and unique has entered into their experience. What they do not see is the work and time behind it.

ABC Video is a company which produces more than the conventional videos of broadcast quality. ABC also offers a new option, an innovation in videography: three-dimensional videos. And they are growing more and more popular.

The 3-D videos' success, Karapancev insists, is the result of many years' hard work, experience and commitment in the video industry — plus a sense of the artistic. An engineer by training, he has spent 15 years developing the idea. The old saying still holds true, that creativity is "90 per cent perspiration and five per cent inspiration."

Karapancev's work has earned him professional acclaim. ABC Video was the only Canadian company to receive Recognition for Creative Excellence at the International Wedding Video Expo '95, held in Orlando, Fla., last July.

He is convinced 3-D Videos will become an art form in their own right. Everyone wants to preserve a special event like a bar or bat mitzvah or a wedding. Karapancev goes one step further. To the sentimental value of the video, he adds an artistic element that makes it beautiful to look at for its own sake.

ABCs three-dimensional videos, he says, can be shown on any TV screen with a VCR. The conventional TV picture, he points out, is flat or two-dimensional. We "read" three-dimensional into it. His image, in contrast, is a genuine in-depth image, but to understand how it differs from the conventional type, one must see it.

Quality in any video is a matter of good camera work, lighting, taping and editing. To these elements, ABC adds original, custom-made animation and music, plus the 3-D option. The new technology does not eliminate the need for technical expertise and hard work.

Talking about other aspects of videography, Zoran says that it is harder, in some ways, than Hollywood filming. Not only must the videographer be unobtrusive, but there are no retakes. Moreover, lighting is set according to the atmosphere desired for the event, not what will make for the best camera shots.

(Although conventional videos can be taken without lighting, Karapancev says some is preferred; and for 3D work, minimal lighting is necessary.)

GOWNS: Understated elegance

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

Understated elegance is fast becoming a fashion standard in the bridal industry, according to Carol Gold, a bridal consultant with Joy Cherry (489-8809).

"Designers such as Vera Wang cater to brides who are more mature and often prefer a simpler, more sophisticated look to the fanciful frills of yesteryear. The gown that's just right for you should stand on its own merits as a fashion garment.

"A wedding gown is, after all, a dress. If it doesn't work fashion-wise — the fit, the cut, the style, the color — then no amount of frills or lace will make it better. Forget you're buying a wedding dress and look at it for a moment as simply a dress. Does it work? Is it something you would be proud to be seen in?"

Clients coming to Joy Cherry benefit from Gold's many years of experience in the bridal and fashion industries. When a bride tries on gowns, Gold strives to get it "just right. Only then do I feel that the consultation has been a success.

"We choose our gowns for the specific niche in the spectrum of bridal moods. For the old-fashioned, romantic yet sophisticated look there is Priscilla; and for a more European/Victorian look, we carry Christos. We have a gown for every bride, in prices ranging from $1,500, which includes custom fittings."

When the gown has been chosen, brides need look no further for accessories such as shoes, jewelry or undergarments.

"Our brides can accessorize on the spot. Taking swatches to jewelry stores and shoe stores is guesswork at best. Here you get the total look under one roof and the result is far superior to buying piecemeal."

Marie Arrigo, vice-president of Alan Cherry's Bridal Salon (922-7433) agrees that brides today are looking for a sophisticated look. "We don't see a lot of glitter and beading. Gowns are formal and sophisticated and come in such fabrics as silk triple organza, silk georgette, makado sauvage, embroidered tulle and silk faille moiree. Laces are made in France and Switzerland.

"The color alternatives are white and ivory, with all its shades. Colors can be found in the most creative part of our collections or in the flowers and ribbons," says Arrigo.

This pleated dress is one of the gowns available at Alan Cherry's.

She advises brides to come in at least six to eight months before the wedding so there is time for at least two or three fittings. "Many brides lose weight before the wedding and we have to take in the gown. We've even managed to let out gowns for pregnant brides."

She says that when gowns are custom-made, brides need not worry about seeing their gown on another bride.

"We begin with a sketch and then work from there. We've always had happy brides, because gowns can be altered along the way. We can lengthen or shorten the sleeves, open or close the neckline or perform any number of alterations that will make the gown perfect.

"By having everything under one roof, the bride saves a lot of running around and is also ensured that everything looks good together and fits well."

Different gifts for different folks

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

If you're in the market for a special present for a bar/bat mitzvah boy or girl, consider a camera or a personalized name gift.

You can find a variety of cameras in a wide price range at Henry's (416-868-0872), one of Toronto's oldest established camera stores.

Henry's has been a haven for photo enthusiasts for over 30 years. The third-generation family business, the largest independent photograhic retailer in the country, offers a large selection of cameras, video and audio equipment at competitive prices.

"A camera is always a good gift. You can capture memories. You keep the photograph with you for the rest of your life," said Mark Wolfson, manager of Henry's downtown store at 119 Church St.

Henry's is also located at 330 Steeles Ave. W. in Thornhill (905-886-1020).

Fully automatic point-and-shoot cameras in the $100 to $200 range make good bar/bat mitzvah gifts, Wolfson said. A point and shoot camera with a zoom lens is $300 to $400.

He said Henry's also has a good selection of single lens reflex (SLR) cameras in the $600 range for those youngsters who are more serious about photography.

Henry's carries light compact binoculars priced from $100 to $130, which can be used for bird watching or sports events, Wolfson said. And he recommends audio equipment priced from $500 to $1,000.

Camcorders, which cost $900 to $1,500, make great gifts for new parents, as well as recent retirees, Wolfson said.

If you're in the market for a smaller gift, consider the Names Boutique (416-292-7725), which offers gift items for a variety of special occasions: births, birthdays, bar/bat mitzvahs, wedding anniversaries, holidays, corporate events and fundraisers.

The Names Boutique, which has been open for a year, is a family business run by Eric and Rolande Sparks and their son Ken. They researched the origin and meaning of first names and developed software to incorporate this research.

They produce write-ups that include origin, meaning and personal characteristics for each name. All the information can be transferred by computer onto clothing, mugs or special paper, along with a variety of clip-art images or personal photographs.

"We have 50,000 names in our data bank and it's growing by the week," Eric Sparks said.

The boutique also sells picture frames: handcrafted, cloth and musical, as well as a menorah frame.

Embroidered onto clothes, the names can make wonderful baby gifts, he said. The company does a lot of newborn gifts, putting the weight, length, date and place of birth along with the origin of the first name.

Gift givers can also add a personalized message for the occasion, Sparks said. Personalized sleepers start at $15.

Gifts at the name boutique start at $6.95 for a personalized key chain, but most are in the $15.99 to $29.99 price range. Mugs start at $13.95 and for an additional $3.50, a photo image can be added. Handcrafted frames are in the $15 to $20 range.

The company offers a shop-at-home-service, where shoppers order from catalogues, and Sparks is planning to expand into malls.

The gifts are of high quality and priced competitively, Sparks said. "We're as unique a gift as you're going to find. It's not just personalized. It's personality-ized."

Make your own wine

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

Two years ago Grant Cats turned his hobby into a full-time business.

Cats made wine as a hobby. The wine was so good family and friends asked him to help them make wine.

Through word of mouth he developed a small cottage industry with his wife Lynne and son Craig, selling wine-making kits and teaching people how to make wine in their homes. Their company, Wine Not, opened its first retail outlet two years ago. Today there are nine stores.

" 'If you can make orange juice I can show you how to make wine,' that was one of Dad's quotes," Craig Cats said. "We have a proven refined method for making wine."

In October 1993, the Cats family expanded the business by opening a wine-making store in the basement of Grant Cats' commercial real estate office on Colborne Street in downtown Toronto. The store was open from noon to 2 p.m. and 5 to 9 p.m.; Grant, Craig and Lynne all worked shifts while holding down other full-time jobs.

They sold wine kits for home vintners, but they also gave lessons on how to make wine. Within a month, Wine Not evolved into an on-the-premises wine-making establishment, Lynne Cats said. "We offered the service. People wanted to make the wine in the store."

They renovated the store to accommodate more on-the-premises wine making, and six months later, they had to rent more space for

HOTELS: 'One-stop shop'

By ERIC LAYMAN
Special to The CJN

Both Lianne Adelson, catering manager of the Park Plaza Hotel (416-924-5471), and Raphy Amar of Beverley Hills Caterers at Le Parc (416-798-7246) highlight the plus side of holding your party or other event in a hotel.

The main advantage is "one-stop shopping." Furniture, linen and other materials that would otherwise be rented are available as a matter of course, as are the kitchen and a competent staff, experienced in hosting events.

A hotel has amenities like parking and clean facilities already in place for its overnight guests. This means you have less work and worry than if you hire a space and then have to manage all the particulars yourself, from florists to caterers. Hotel staff, moreover, are used to working together as professionals — and working with the outside services you hire, such as a band and videographer.

For most people, there is a great deal of work in organizing a simchah even with "one-stop shopping." Why make life more complicated than it has to be? Consequently, more and more are turning to hotels to host their events.

Adelson points out that at the Park Plaza, cost includes everything, right down to the cutting of the cake. It's good to get all kinds of services under one roof; it's even better to know that once you agree on a price, there will be no unexpected additions.

Amar makes the same point. "Compare shop," Amar says, "but compare apples with apples. Remember that to get quality, you have to spend something."

In choosing a location for your event, Adelson advises, see how the room is set up for another function. Does it look like a place where the guests will enjoy themselves? Are the banquet hall and dance floor large enough? How are the rooms laid out? Is everything spotlessly clean and in good repair?

There is no way to know the answers to these questions without being there. Adelson extends advance involvement to include the food: at the Park Plaza, prospective clients are offered a tasting.

Adelson encourages clients to ask questions. Don't be afraid because you are not a maven in the business of hosting parties, of sounding naive or uninformed. The only way to be informed, is to ask.

"Too many questions are better than too few," she insists. "Better the clients should be fussy before an event, than complain after."

another fermentation room.

Grant then left his day-time job to concentrate on the wine business, his wife and son joining him within the year.

Seven of the nine stores are in the Greater Toronto Area. The head office is at 15 Heritage Road #2 in Markham (905-294-WINE).

Customers book appointments for the first stages of wine making, a 15 to 20 minutes process, to select their wine concentrate and prepare it for fermentation. They come back for an hour 28 days later to bottle, shrink-wrap and label the wine. The wine can be drunk right away, but it tastes better if it is aged for 30 to 45 days, Lynne said.

"There's a lot involved in making the wine and it can get very messy, but Wine Not takes care of the mess," she said. "We pride ourselves on our service and cleanliness."

The cost of the wine is $89 for a selection of 30 750-ml. bottles. The price also includes the shrink-wrap and the labels. The stores carry 35 different concentrates and 500 blended concentrates.

The wine makes a nice gift and at $3 a bottle it's very inexpensive, Craig Cats said. Gift certificates are also available and redeemable at any Wine Not store. Groups of 10 or more people can book the store for private wine-making parties.

The company also offers special wedding and corporate packages. The bride and groom can make their own private-label wine and serve it at their wedding.

All they do is choose their concentrate and sprinkle the yeast. Wine Not does the rest. Three hundred bottles will cost them approximately $3.95 a bottle. Such packages are also available for corporate functions and gifts.

"It's all legal with LCBO. You can legally serve the wine at a banquet hall," Lynne said.

"Wine making is an art that involves temperature control, highly sanitary conditions and knowledge of the wine itself," she said. "When you make it on our premises we take care of it all for you and we guarantee our product. Our motto is: 'We make it simple. You make it great.' "

CHAIRPERSON'S MESSAGE

On behalf of the Holocaust Remembrance Committee, it is my pleasure to invite you to participate in the 15th Annual HOLOCAUST EDUCATION WEEK. The committee has worked very hard to provide you with a wide array of informative and stimulating programs, suited to all ages and interests.

As part of the Holocaust Remembrance Committee, HOLOCAUST EDUCATION WEEK serves to fulfill our mandate to remember the horrific events of 50 years ago and to educate the community. Only through remembrance and education can we both honour the memory of those lost in the Holocaust and sensitize future generations to its lessons.

This year the Holocaust Education and Memorial Centre of Toronto marks its 10th Anniversary. Administered by the Holocaust Remembrance Committee, the Centre has grown in stature over the years. Since its opening a decade ago, more than 100,000 Jewish and non-Jewish students from across Canada and around the world have passed through its distinctive brass doors. There they witness a time of unimaginable horror and learn about the strength of the human spirit.

Like HOLOCAUST EDUCATION WEEK, the Centre is dedicated to the memory of the six million and is committed to the advancement of public awareness of the Holocaust. I urge you to visit the Centre during this special week of education, introspection and renewed hope.

I would like to take this opportunity to both congratulate and thank Michael Herman and Doron Opher and their outstanding committee, all volunteers, for their tireless efforts which have culminated in the excellent programs herein described.

The committee has done its part - and now it's up to us! It is incumbent upon us all to ensure that the warnings from the past do not go unheeded. With a deeper understanding of our past, we can make a difference so that our actions today will realize our hopes for tomorrow.

Eleanor Getzler
Chairperson
Holocaust Remembrance Committee
Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto

CHAIRPERSONS' MESSAGE

During the course of the 15th Annual HOLOCAUST EDUCATION WEEK an abundance of speakers in numerous programs will share with us their memories, their studies and their thoughts. Some of the speakers witnessed the atrocities first hand, some were born well after the last camp was liberated.

Doron Opher

Michael Herman

Even with the lapse of time, most of us have not forgotten. Instead we have been motivated, especially the younger generation, to assume the responsibility towards the victims, the survivors, and future generations. We all share the moral obligation and personal honour to absorb and cherish testimonies at first hand. We undertake this challenge, and we do so with pride.

Indeed, when we hear a story like that of our keynote speaker, Faye Schulman, we feel a sense of great pride and admiration. As a teenager she faced an unbearable reality and demonstrated a tremendous, striking maturity as can be seen from this quotation from her newly-published book:

> "My family is dead; my town has been occupied. I will never live here again. I do not want the murderers to have the use of our home. In less time than it takes to form these thoughts, I shout back at him in an assertive tone that meets his, 'Burn it!' He pours gasoline on the living room floor. I light the matches and the house is instantly ablaze.... I feel heartbroken, devastated, as though something precious has been lost yet again. Still more ties to my past are irrevocably severed."

HOLOCAUST EDUCATION WEEK deals with a welter of confusing and conflicting facts, events, personalities and lives that led up to and constituted the Holocaust. Let us study, learn and ponder - to educate ourselves so that we are better people, and so that we can convey this knowledge and history to our children. Let us study, learn and ponder - so that we can remember our six million brethren who were consumed, and so that, as a people we can pay tribute to their sacrifice and forever bear witness to their senseless slaughter.

We extend our appreciation to our dedicated committee members, without whom this program would not be a reality. We also wish to thank all the organizations who willingly committed time and resources to participate. Special thanks to Eleanor Getzler, Chairperson and Pnina Zilberman, Director of the Holocaust Remembrance Committee, Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto. It was a pleasure working with both of you.

FAYE SCHULMAN

Faye is an internationally recognized photographer who lectures extensively about her experiences during the Holocaust. A collection of her photographs is on view in the U.S. Holocaust Museum in Washington; others can be found in exhibits around the world.

"A Partisan's Memoir"

Faye Schulman was a happy teenager learning to become a photographer when the Nazis invaded her small town on the Russian-Polish border. She had a loving family, good friends and neighbours, most of whom were soon lost in the horrors of the Holocaust.

But she survived, and the photographs she took testify to her experiences and the persecution she witnessed. Decorated for heroism by several governments, Faye, now in her mid-seventies, tells an extraordinary story, not just of survival but of struggle and resistance against oppression.

Her unforgettable book A Partisan's Memoir, Woman of the Holocaust will be released this evening in conjunction with the Jewish Book Fair.

Israeli security on alert

CJN News Services

JERUSALEM - Israeli security forces have reportedly gone on alert for possible reprisals in the wake of the assassination of the leader of the fundamentalist Islamic Jihad movement.

Islamic Jihad officials vowed to take revenge against Israeli targets around the world after Dr. Fathi Shakaki was assassinated last Thursday in Malta.

Israel declined to comment on whether it was behind the shooting.

Islamic Jihad said in a statement issued in the Gaza Strip, "This horrendous crime will make every Zionist, wherever they are on the face of the earth, a target of our amazing blasts and our bodies exploding in anger" - an apparent allusion to renewed suicide bombings of Israeli targets.

The Palestinian Authority called on the Islamic Jihad to refrain from retaliation, saying that it could ultimately hurt the self-rule government.

But Islamic Jihad officials rejected the Palestinian appeal. In its statement calling for revenge, it vowed to "set the ground on fire underneath the feet of the criminal Zionists."

Israel Radio reported security services had information of a young Palestinian intending to carry out a suicide attack. As a result, the entry of Palestinians into Israel from the Gaza Strip and the West Bank had been restricted.

The services were reported to have had the information that an attack had been planned for the period of the Jewish holidays. But now, after Shakaki's death, there were fears the suicide bomber would try again. Israel had given this information to the Palestinian Authority.

The threats of renewed violence by Islamic Jihad come days after

CANADA ISSUES HOLOCAUST STAMP

Canada Post will be issuing a stamp on Nov. 9 commemorating the 50th anniversary of the end of the Holocaust and the anniversary of Kristallnacht. The 45-cent stamp, designed by the Toronto firm Q30 Designs Inc., presents a photo collage including various authentic artifacts, including the yellow Star of David and passport stamped "J". The items appearing on the stamp are part of the collection found at the Holocaust Education and Memorial Centre in Toronto. Photo - Canada Post

Seeking missing millions

'We must not let them get away with it'

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO - Call it the case of the missing millions.

Years before banks in Switzerland recently announced that they were prepared to hand over accounts of Holocaust victims worth at least $34 million to their rightful heirs, Ron Singer was trying to recover his late uncle's fortune, which is apparently lodged in a Swiss bank.

Feature

If Singer, a Torontonian, is successful in his decades-long quest, he and an aunt in Toronto – his uncle's 92-year-old-sister, may well be the recipients of a $4 million (US) windfall.

Singer's uncle, Velvel Singer, a wealthy businessman from Poland who perished in Auschwitz in 1944 or 1945, was the co-owner of the Singer Sewing Machine Company in Lodz. Later known as Singer i Lachman, it had no connection with the Singer Sewing Machine Company in Germany, to the best of Ron Singer's knowledge.

Velvel's partner, his brother Morris, was Ron Singer's father. He died in 1982.

In 1945, when Ron Singer was seven years old, a stranger visited his parents' home in Montreal. The visitor, a former employee of Singer i Lachman, informed Morris that before Velvel was shot and killed in Auschwitz, he had told him that he had deposited $4 million in a European bank.

The visitor, however, could furnish no details - the name and location of the bank, much less the account number.

With nothing to go on, Morris scoffed at the claim. "My father," said Ron Singer, "never bothered to look into the matter. He thought it would be a waste of time."

Ron Singer, however, was intrigued. When he was 20 years old, he went to the Bank of England in London and staked a claim. The response was withering. "Basically, they said, 'get lost.' "

In 1987, Ron Singer contacted Terry Howes of Toronto, who describes himself as a "locator of missing heirs." Following an investigation, Howes reached the conclusion that Velvel Singer had probably deposited a large sum of money in a bank in Switzerland.

"Wealthy Jews in Lodz did their banking in Zurich," explained Ron Singer. "The odds are that the money was placed in a Zurich bank."

Article Offends

KINGSTON, Ont. — An article that appeared in the weekly engineering newspaper at Queen's University has drawn scorn from Jewish groups and the school's administration.

But editors at Golden Words say the article about being Jewish was written by two Jews and was intended to be "tongue-in-cheek."

The story made several stereotypical references to kosher food, the Holocaust and worldwide conspiracies.

Jewish groups at Queen's and nearby Royal Military College, a Kingston synagogue and Queen's principal William Leggett have condemned the piece.

But co-writer Elan Mastai defended the piece, saying it "blows up stereotypes to ridiculous extremes."

'Journalism in Peril'

TORONTO — The British Columbia Press Council's decision on a column written by Doug Collins "puts all journalism in peril," states a letter to the Victoria Times-Colonist by Sol Littman, Canadian spokesperson for the Simon Wiesenthal Centre.

"To excuse Collins' behavior on the grounds that he was merely 'engaging in the expression of opinion' when he breached the council's code of practice is to add confusion to ignominy," Littman wrote.

He criticized the press council for failing to order the North Shore News, which ran Collins' column, to publish a correction or an apology.

The Press Council found that in writing about the Holocaust, Collins misrepresented various sources. But the council went on to defend Collins' right to express his opinions.

ISRAEL

Crash Kills 10

JERUSALEM — At least 10 people were killed and two injured last Tuesday in a road accident northwest of Jerusalem.

Police said the crash was one of the worst in Israel's history. It happened when a tractor-trailer swerved out of its lane and into oncoming traffic, crushing and dragging at least two cars.

Police identified eight of the dead as Arab workers from Nazareth, where a day of mourning was declared.

Indictments Considered

JERUSALEM — Attorney General Michael Ben-Yair is reportedly considering issuing indictments against a number of senior Labor party officials, in connection with the government's investigation into alleged misuse of Histadrut labor federation funds.

Transportation Minister Yisrael Kessar, former Histadrut secretary-general Haim Haberfeld and former treasurer Arthur Yisraelovitch were among the officials named.

The investigation is based on allegations that previous Histadrut officials misappropriated millions of dollars of members' dues for their political campaigns.

Guards for Labor

JERUSALEM — Volunteers from the Histadrut, the Labor Young Guard and the United Kibbutz Movement will accompany Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and other ministers on all public appearances to prevent right-wing provocations and violence, it was announced last week.

The volunteers will also photograph those committing acts of violence and will present the evidence to the police.

Bar-Ilan Program

RAMAT-GAN — Bar-Ilan University has announced a new, fully accredited junior year program for overseas university students to begin next September.

Students in the "Junior Year of Jewish Heritage" program will engage in touring and extensive volunteer work in Israel in addition to their joint curriculum of Jewish and secular courses.

"We want them to feel like they're actively participating in Israeli society," said Robert Katz, Bar-Ilan's North American director of Academic Affairs.

For further information, contact Canadian Friends of Bar-Ilan University, 905-660-3563 or 514-731-7893

Immigration Tally

JERUSALEM — Some 2.5 million immigrants have arrived in Israel since 1948, the Central Bureau of Statistics said last week.

Of the total figure, some 59 per cent came from Europe, 19 per cent from Africa, 15 per cent from Asia and seven per cent from the Americas and Oceania.

Explanation on Pollard

JERUSALEM — Israel's High Court of Justice has ordered the government to explain why it turned down convicted spy Jonathan Pollard's request for Israeli citizenship.

Pollard, a former U.S. naval intelligence analyst, was sentenced in 1987 to life imprisonment for spying for Israel. He applied for Israeli citizenship in the hope, in part, that it would improve his chances for parole.

His request for Israeli citizenship was turned down by Interior Minister Ehud Barak last month.

Concern Over Farrakhan

JERUSALEM — Israel last week voiced concern over anti-Semitic statements attributed to U.S. Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan.

The Knesset voted unanimously to pass on several motions on Farrakhan to the foreign affairs and defence committees.

MK Yigal Bibi, who submitted one of the motions, said the "sounds and images coming out of the U.S. are reminiscent of the dark days of the rise of Nazism."

WORLD

Suit Dismissed

MUNICH — A German court last week dismissed a $28-million damage suit brought against the government by relatives of the 11 Israeli athletes murdered at the 1972 Munich Olympics.

The judge said the plaintiffs had already been compensated by $1 million under the terms of a 1973 agreement in which they agreed not to pursue any further claims.

Shamir focuses on aliyah in low key address

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Those who expected another blistering denunciation of Israel's Labor government and the Olso peace accords may have been a bit disappointed with last week's speech here by former Israeli prime minister Yitzhak Shamir.

Instead of pumping up Likud and its supporters, and explaining how the party would handle negotiations with the Palestinians, Shamir read a prepared text on aliyah.

Before over 1,000 people at Beth Tikvah Congregation, in a talk presented by United Jewish Appeal, the former Likud PM called aliyah the "backbone" of Israel. Jewish immigration has injected the country with new blood and has bolstered Israel's scientific and technological abilities, he said, adding that the full effects of the wave of immigration since 1989 have yet to be felt.

The Arab world has viewed the great influx of immigrants "joylessly ... a tragedy. Today, we can safely say to the Western world that aliyah is no longer a utopian dream. Immigrants have been integrated and comfortably settled. The gap in the standard of living [between the West and Israel] is closing."

The only spontaneous applause came when Shamir said Jerusalem "will remain ours, under Israeli sovereignty, forever," and when he warned that "the Syrians know what will happen to Damascus should they attack us."

He called for Jewish unity — "a national front of the Jewish people" — in order to "strive and work together for our state of Israel."

The day will come, he said, when most of the world's Jews will live in Israel.

In Montreal two days earlier, Shamir delivered a fiery address in which he repeatedly slammed the peace process, and was met with standing ovations, cheers and waving of Israeli flags.

Shamir's talk left many in the audience scratching their heads. Questioner Max Brown said he and others were "puzzled" by the speech, and launched into a query on the peace process.

Shamir responded that "everything is linked to Jewish unity."

Responding to other questions, he said there is "no contradiction" between supporting UJA and Jewish settlers in the territories.

He said he will not discuss details of Likud policy, "but you know our principles and goals. We will act in this spirit."

Applause also came after Meir Halevi of the Jewish Defence League asked what Israel would do if Jews were killed in Hebron. Shamir answered that Israeli forces "will do whatever is necessary, not only in Israel, but all over the world."

At a press conference on the morning of his talk, Shamir told The CJN he's "not surprised" by current talks between the PLO and Hamas. But he called the PLO's decision to abstain from terror "a tactical move" that will simply "postpone" terror attacks against Israel.

He said an agreement between Hamas and the PLO will happen "one day."

LET THE SHOPPING BEGIN

HAVE YOUR HAIR PERMED, COLOURED AND HIGHLIGHTED, ALL IN BEAUTIFUL GLORIOUS CONDITION!
We have talked with Mr. Shelley, President of N.A.H.D., world-renowned and Owner of Shelley's Hairstyling. Shelley spent years of research and discovered the use of Amino Acids which "help restore chemically broken bonds in damaged hair."
He also discovered the use of Low Acid products. "The P.H. level is a main ingredient. Just picture numbers from 1-12. Your natural hair level is about P.H.5; regular perms and hair colouring are a much higher P.H. and the higher you go, the more damage will occur. I concentrate on bringing down the P.H. levels of my perms and colours to lower than P.H. 5, which makes them a treatment for the hair. This is a true revolution."

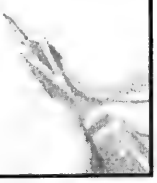
From the editor's desk



To be counted in a community is as much a responsibility as it is an honor. For, along with designation, come duties. The Torah emphasizes the importance of being counted, literally, among the group by describing two separate enumerations of the people during their wanderings in the desert.

But of course, there is another way to be counted among the group, not by designation, but rather, by deed, standing shoulder to shoulder alongside a friend, bearing the same burden, striving for the same cause, marching toward the same horizon. As most people can attest, to be needed by someone, or by some purpose and then to respond, creates that wonderful feeling of being counted in the group.

That "wonderful feeling" is the subject of an important work by Wendy Eisen called Count Us In, The Struggle to Free Soviet Jews, A Canadian Perspective (Burgher Books, 1995.)

Eisen has chronicled, in full, compelling detail, how countless communities around the world mobilized for three and half decades to rescue the Jews of the former Soviet Union. The book describes the campaigns waged both inside and outside the Iron Curtain.

Now, fully six years after that curtain crashed down, and as a new generation of children begins to flower without ever having known the cruel obstinacy of its malevolent, iron lock, Count Us In provides a replay of the struggle. The book is a primer in social activism and a record of Jewish history.

The names which were once the echoes of our heartbeats and the rallying cries for our assemblies fill the pages and evoke memories of the barricades we tried to bring down: Sharansky, Nudel, Begun, Brailovsky, Ovsisher, Edelshtein, Kuznetsov, Lerner, Slepak, Kosharovsky, Cherniak, Kislik, Uspensky, Lurie, Keis, Elbert, Rais...

As Eisen writes, "The largest aliyah movement in the history of the Jewish people was made possible by men and women who embodied the living spirit of the symbol of freedom. Collectively, they spent hundreds of years in prison and thousands of years in refusal. These Soviet Jews were courageous enough to protest; openly, when it was so much safer to remain silent."

Eisen eloquently captures the idealism, the drive and the urgency that we, as young college students, felt to improve the world. We needed to matter in the overall scheme of life and to make a difference in the lives of others. But more importantly, Eisen also provides the larger, more accurate dimension of the vast numbers of people - "ordinary citizens" - who were involved in the struggle for Soviet Jewry beyond the young and the restless of the campuses.

It was a cause in which very large numbers of good people took part. Most volunteered; few were conscripted. Throughout their involvement, they held in their hands, as Prof. Irwin Cotler states in the book "...the moral power of solidarity in a just cause..."

It was exhilarating. And it was unifying, tying together in common cause Chabad, the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations, United Synagogue of Conservative Judaism and the World Union for Progressive Judaism (Reform). The only denomination that mattered was the denomination of those who wanted to be counted upon and counted in.

I found only one minor inaccuracy in the book which in no way detracts from its excellence but which does warrant comment, nevertheless. In describing the rallies of protests in Toronto and Montreal which were held on Oct. 19, 1982, in support of Anatoly Sharansky who was then on a hunger strike, the author wrote: "...and in Montreal, the refrain "We are leaving Mother Russia," an original song written about Sharansky by two American activists, was amplified and played repeatedly at noon, for one week, outside the Soviet Consulate."

Eisen couldn't know that one of the two American activists was in fact a Canadian. His story too is a tribute to activism, involvement, and the "moral power of solidarity in a just cause". I will write about him in a future column.

World turned blind eye to carnage in Rwanda

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — At the height of the carnage in Rwanda, more than 70,000 people were being slaughtered every day — twice the peak rate at which Jews were killed by the Nazis during the Holocaust.

In all, about one million people were killed "in a ruthless genocide" that shocked the world but which, like the Holocaust before it, did not prompt an outraged world community to act to stop it.

In fact, pointed out Prof. Howard Adelman, the Rwanda genocide was noteworthy for the abdication of responsibility by the world community, which knew of the plans for massacre and could have, with relatively little effort, nipped it in the bud.

Adelman, presenting the annual Harry Crowe Lecture at Toronto's York University, contrasted the relative ease of stopping the genocide in Rwanda with the difficulty of confronting the Nazis.

In Rwanda, you weren't dealing with a formidable fighting machine but rather with a presidential guard and a single battalion. The slaughter began with the United Nations present and "it could have easily been nipped in the bud, or at least mitigated," he said.

In fact, the world community's involvement in Rwanda is one characterized by the United Nation's bureaucratic inertia and timidity, lack of will and the perception that Rwanda was not strategically important to any of the world powers, Adelman said.

Furthermore, an incredible amount of "incredulity" was displayed by various nations which did not want to believe that genocide was taking place.

Adelman, founder and director of the Centre for Refugee Studies at York University, along with Astri Suhrke, a Norwegian colleague, recently completed a study on the early warning signs of the refugee disaster that befell Rwanda.

The report will be presented next week in Copenhagen to the report's sponsors, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD).

Adelman told about 40 people attending the lecture that he titled his discussion, Never Again! Do We Mean It after visiting the Holocaust Museum in Washington.

About one third of the visitors who signed a book on departing the museum employed that phrase, but his research showed that the world community turned a blind eye to the killings.

The UN debated massive intervention versus complete withdrawal when a modest intervention would have turned the tables, Adelman said.

The United States, stung by the loss of its soldiers in Somalia, "delayed enormously" and even refused to label the killings "genocide," fearing that would have required them to take some action.

"Too few lessons were learned from the Holocaust," Adelman concluded. "Rwanda was a fairly easy [case]. It's changed me. You begin to understand Israelis who say when the crunch comes, they'll let you down."

1995 Negev Dinner Tribute

excellence in communal leadership and dedicated public service

Sunday, November 26, 1995 at The Sheraton Centre, Toronto

Reception: 5:00 p.m. Dinner: 6:00 p.m.

Tickets to the Dinner are $107 per person with a minimum contribution of $360 (for which a tax receipt will be issued)

Campaign and Dinner Co-Chairs:
Sheila Engel and Jack Gwartz

A special project will be initiated on the occasion of the Negev Dinner in tribute to Leslie L. Dan, to be known as THE DAN FAMILY ARAVA DEVELOPMENT PROJECT, dedicated to the loving memory of the late Judith Dan.

The reclamation project to be undertaken in the Arava, a barren and wilderness area of the eastern Negev Desert, running south from the Dead Sea down along the border with Jordan to Eilat, will transform a very old dream into a new reality. Fertile agricultural land supporting an enhanced population base and light industry will blossom forth. For JNF, this is a long-time wish, a "back to the basics" Zionist approach to making the Negev "green" and productive. A rejuvenated Arava!

With the support of the Toronto community, JNF will act to realize the vision of the prophet: "And the desert will become a paradise and the wilderness a garden of the Lord."

Koffler Breast Centre opens at Mount Sinai

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Family and friends, government, hospital and community agency representatives joined Marvelle and Murray Koffler last week to celebrate the opening of the Marvelle Koffler Breast Centre.

The 10,000-square-foot outpatient centre is located on the 12th floor of Mount Sinai Hospital, in the Samuel Lunenfeld Research Institute. It includes facilities for medical, surgical, radiation and plastic surgery consultations; chemotherapy; medical and diagnostic imaging; psycho-social support for women with breast cancer or at risk for developing it, and their families; genetic counselling; a resource centre and library; and a research unit.

A stereotactic biopsy table combines needle biopsy with medical imaging. The two-dimensional image produced on a computer screen allows the depth of a tumor to be calculated without surgery.

A unique service is a boutique that offers accessories for those with breast cancer, such as prostheses, turbans and hats, fashionable mastectomy bathing suits, cosmetics and elegant wigs.

Theodore Freedman, president and CEO of Mount Sinai Hospital, described how "Marvelle Koffler saw the need to meet the needs of women with breast cancer with [a program of] compassionate and integrated care."

The centre, he said, was built completely by private donations, using no government funds. "It was a silent but effective campaign, coordinated by Marvelle Koffler."

Chairman of the Board Lloyd Fogler called the centre and the $3-million fundraising campaign "one of the most successful partnerships between a hospital and its community."

Ontario Minister of Health Jim Wilson, noting wryly, that "it is hard to find a hospital where a minister of health is welcome these days," thanked the Kofflers for their "good citizenship and the hope you brought to cancer patients."

Marvelle Koffler "didn't just survive [breast cancer herself] but added to the quality of life for others," he said.

Wilson pointed out that one in nine women gets breast cancer, and one in 23 dies from it.

"This government encourages self-examination and mammograms. The dollars are there for it."

Centre director Dr. Pamela Goodwin said the centre was intended to unite all the services for breast patients in one area, in a "comforting, relaxing and reassuring environment."

Murray Koffler, laughing at being referred to as not merely a generous philanthropist but "the husband of Marvelle Koffler," said "it was a privilege to have added another component to an already great hospital."

First patients

He stressed that the centre is "not just a Marvelle and Murray Koffler project. We thought it was an idea people would like to be part of," he said, thanking other major donors, which included Apotex, the Latner Family Foundation, Shoppers Drug Mart, the Lokash family and the families of Jerry and Carole Grafstein, Ralph and Roslyn Halbert, Morris and Miriam Kerzner and Carol and Barrie Rose.

In a touching conclusion, Marvelle Koffler was presented flowers by an exhuberant 5-year-old Gianni Cappellano, whose mother Anita was treated for breast cancer shortly after his birth, and whose aunt Marilisa Sears is one of the first patients of the centre.

The centre, designed by Rosalie Wise-Sharp in blond wood and black and jade furniture, is replete with paintings, sculptures, pottery, tapestries and prints. Many of the windows are of stencilled glass.

Hospital press officer Sara Taylor stressed that the centre is not just a breast cancer centre. "It is a centre for education and prevention of breast disease."

Branson president questions govt. cost-saving claims

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — There may be no money saved as a result of closing Branson hospital and merging it with York-Finch, despite the claim by the committee recommending the step that it would save $15 million a year.

That was the assertion Oct. 25 of Jack Gallop, president and CEO of Branson, at a Bernard Betel Centre meeting sponsored by the centre's social action comittee.

The $15 million should be cut in half, because the Metro Toronto District Health Council (MTDHC) used the larger figure without considering the merger and the resultant savings. In addition, the interest on the $60 million needed to effect the merger will reduce the saving even further, perhaps to $2.5 million, Gallop said.

"In fact, there may be no saving at all," said Gallop. He added that many beds at the new York-Finch hospital would be empty if residents in the Branson area choose to go elsewhere.

The Branson president said he questions the figures in the report, which show that the York-Finch hospital area residents have a lower income and a higher need than do the Branson residents.

"Have they taken an average figure of income in this area?" he asked. "Many of our patients are on fixed incomes."

Gallop disputed the committee's conclusion that Branson hospital is not "culturally sensitive" because Jewish people have the option of going to Mount Sinai hospital.

"We are culturally sensitive," he said. "We have 35 per cent Jewish patients and Mount Sinai has seven per cent, while 15 per cent go to North York General."

The claim that Branson doctors would have admitting privileges at York-Finch after the merger was ridiculed by Dr. Michael Henry, a Branson ophthalmologist.

During the question period, members asked if the contributions of Jewish residents to Branson for new equipment and renovations would be pointed out to the MTDHC. Gallop assured them it would.

"Why are you doing it?" asked one woman, directing her question to panelist Lorne Zon, MTDHC executive director. "Branson is a very busy hospital and we need it badly."

"There are no winners and no losers in the merger," said Zon. "The report suggests a new idea for Branson, that it become a hospital without beds, open 18 to 24 hours a day."

Zon said the report gives Branson the option of maintaining an emergency department, but this was later denied by Gallop.

Two thousand join rally to protest hospital closing

TORONTO — Some 2,000 people rallied here last Sunday against the closing of North York Branson hospital.

Speakers including North York Mayor Mel Lastman, Liberal MPP Monte Kwinter and Metro Councillor Norm Gardner warned of dire consquences for the surrounding community should Branson be closed.

And last Friday, the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto said it is "distressed" at the possible closing of Branson, at a meeting at North York city hall to hear public submissions on the issue.

Federation vice-president Alan Sandler told the Metro Toronto District Hospital Council that the proposal to merge Branson with York-Finch hospital is not sensible since the communities served by the two hospitals are separate.

Closing Branson was also opposed by Moshe Greengarten, vice-president of the Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care, who said that many seniors at Baycrest rely on Branson for accute care.

On behalf of the Bernard Betel Centre, Rita Duenisch-Turner said that "seniors are being shafted" by the possible closing of Branson.

Observant Jews would be particilarly hard hit by a merger, according to Rabbi Jordan Pearlson of Temple Sinai Congregation, who said the added seven-kilometre distance from Branson to York-Finch would make it impossible to visit on the Sabbath.

Council member Carole Mucke asked Greengarten why the community is upset, since the recommendation is not to close Branson but merge it with York-Finch.

Greengarten replied that the distance factor was the critical element.

Moving the embassy

Last week, the United States Congress overwhelmingly approved legislation requiring the American government to move its embassy in Israel to Jerusalem by the end of May 1999. There was no ambiguity in the vote. The Senate voted 93 to 5 in favor; the House of Representatives voted 374 to 38.

Whether the American legislators were motivated more by domestic considerations or foreign geopolitical ones is irrelevant. What counts now is the result. The most powerful nation on earth, the one whose support is vital for the parties attempting to make peace in the Middle East, has delivered a powerful signal to the international community and most especially to the Arab world, about Jerusalem's unassailable capital status within Israel.

The bill calls upon Jerusalem to remain forever united. It requires the State Department to allocate $25 million in 1996 and $75 million in 1997 towards the relocation of the embassy.

President Bill Clinton has publicly expressed displeasure with the timing of the congressional initiative at this juncture in the negotiations between Israel and the Palestinian Authority. However his displeasure is not so great that he will veto the bill.

For its part, the government of Israel is very happy.

Before last week, it had expressed a decidedly diffident, lukewarm, coy endorsement of the proposed American legislation, justifying its position on the basis of not wanting to prejudice the peace talks. But now that the bill has been passed, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin has breathed openly enthusiastic sighs of gratitude and congratulations. "In Israel, there is one subject on which there is no disagreement – the unity of Jerusalem and its continued status as Israel's capital. From our perspective, Jerusalem is not an issue for compromise." He then called upon other countries to follow the example of the U.S. Congress.

We urge the government of Canada to be one of those countries. Such a decision by Canada would help to provide an anchor of stability against the listing and the buffeting of the final stage negotiations, which are certain to be even more difficult and more emotionally charged than those to date.

The enemy within

In his column of Nov. 2, the editor-in-chief of The Jerusalem Report, Hirsh Goodman, writes of the dark, ominous developments creeping into Israel's political landscape. "The political divide has grown deep and wide and hysteria and hatred have replaced debate. Friends who think differently are shouting at each other and a culture of violence has permeated the atmosphere. The nation's leaders are being physically and verbally attacked wherever they go; rational voices on the right are being shouted down."

It is as much a cri de coeur as it is a warning. He expresses alarm that the roughhouse tactics are encroaching into the mainstream of political life and discourse. He openly worries that "it is only a matter of time before this country's democratic institutions are trampled in the gutter and chaos becomes the norm."

Goodman does not actually identify the extremists except to say that they are "a large and powerful group which has serious representation in the Knesset and the resources to act anywhere in the country." However, he does criticize both the prime minister and the leader of the opposition for generating the political anxiety so frighteningly exploited by others. He faults the prime minister for failing to address the fears of the settlers, he criticizes Benjamin Netanyahu for offering no alternative to the government's policies and for failing to control his over-zealous lieutenants.

The distressing deterioration in Israel of democracy's canons and society's civilities concerns Jewish people throughout the world. We have written on the subject, as has every other serious Jewish newspaper in the Diaspora. Much more will be written.

Goodman's conclusion cuts the heart with a shudder as cold as the moon. "Opinions can differ, but the commitment to the rule of law has to be universal; otherwise we will do from within what others have been unable to do from without – destroy Israel." God forbid.

Rittmeister deserves status of Righteous Gentile

With reference to Simon Schweitzer's letter (CJN, Oct. 12), I, too was a prison at Bunzlau. I remember Mr. Schweitzer as well as his brother. I was most puzzled after reading two letters written by Majer Siegman. As I had no recollection of the name, I checked with other former camp prisoners and not one had heard of this person.

My birth name is Meyer Dzialonszynski. Most everyone at the camp knew me and vice versa. I am in total agreement with Mr. Schweitzer and can attest to the kindness and thoughtfulness shown on the part of Rittmeister Willi Michael. I will forever be indebted to this gentleman, as on two separate occasions he saved my life. I was one of the first at the camp and recall that we nicknamed him "the Grandfather." He caused no one harm. Upon the advent of Yom Kippur, he inquires why we were not praying, allowed us this privilege and fell asleep overseeing the situation.

Towards the end, I was hiding in a barn with four others when the Germans started shooting prisoners attempting to escape. Rittmeister Willi Michael was away in Gorlitz Lower Silesia. When he returned, the shooting stopped.

As I too can attest to the extraordinary humanity shown by Willi Michael, I feel that he should have been given the status of Righteous Gentile.

Jews must look after their own

I would like to comment on how the Mexican Jewish community is responding to today's economic reality, a reality that is familiar to all of us in the Canadian Jewish community.

The Mexican Jewish community is calling on its own members to get together to fulfil the mitzvah of Ha'am Yisrael arevim zeh lazeh.

The Jewish community in Mexico is appealing to all not to cut back on their support to the community. They are asking individuals who could do something to do it now! They are asking the yishuv to understand that these difficult times can unite the community and provide an excellent opportunity to show our children, and all the Jews all over the world, that Judaism is more than the simple meaning of giving. They are appealing to people to embrace the mitzvah of caring for one to another, including the creation of jobs and assisting with temporary financial aid (not charity) to families.

Perhaps it is time for our Jewish leaders to appeal to our community, young and old, to do something more than protesting "government cuts." I am convinced that the Ontario government can learn a great deal from our Jewish determination to put into practice our Avinu Malkeinu prayers. We must always protest against governments that treat us Jews differently than other citizens. A case in point would be Jewish education.

Our challenge today, I believe, is how not to get lost as a people. Let's embrace this challenge of caring one for each other with honor, and let us all take care of one another.

Yiddish not a moribund language

That was an interesting article about the Bialik H.S. Yiddish department. We all appreciate their efforts.

However, I am sure you are aware that there are schools in Montreal were Yiddish is not a "compulsory course" but the everyday language of communication among the students from daycare to high school age. I teach in one of these schools, and I can assure you that no one there thinks Yiddish is a "moribund" language. How could it be moribund if it is used at home, in school and on the street?

Peace Process: Skeptic

Israel becoming tragically vulnerable

By RABBI REUBEN J. POUPKO

For anyone committed to Jewish unity and dignity, the past two years have been profoundly troubling. The debate over current Israeli policies has seen Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin branded as a traitor, the Diaspora critics of the Oslo accord referred to by Rabin as mukzim (loathsome), Netanyahu labelled a Hamas collaborator and settlers delegitimized through a barrage of invective. All of this not only sullies the political debate but has opened potentially irreparable fissures within the Jewish world.

It is widely assumed that the opposition of the Orthodox community to the Oslo accords is linked to the religious claim concerning the sanctity of Judea and Samaria. The assumption is that for the Orthodox Jew, the possession of biblical/ancestral land takes priority over the search for peace.

While this may be true for a small minority of the Orthodox community, I believe, that for the large majority, opposition to Oslo is based upon the belief that its risks outweigh its purported benefits. Specifically, that the pillars of the Oslo accords are built upon a combination of false confidence in Yasser Arafat, incorrect projections of future Palestinian Arab behavior and the sacrificing of vital security assets of the Jewish state.

The supporters of Oslo, on the other hand, prefer to speak of a new Middle East, where Israel is a full partner in the economic life, and dismiss these risks as outdated rhetoric of a bygone era.

What I hope to discuss, within the limited confines of this article, apart from the relative legitimacy of each of these approaches, is the underlying sensibilities which I believe informs the Orthodox perspective.

There has been a century-old debate within Zionism as to the ultimate goal of Jewish sovereignty. This debate is centered upon the understanding of the phrase "normalization of the Jewish condition." While all agree that this phrase expresses the essence of the Zionist dream, we do not agree upon the definition of "normal."

The majority of Zionists define normalization as the Jewish people's attaining their rightful place in the community of nations, erasing the indignity of statelessness and being accepted as a people equal to all others. A minority of Zionists, the religious in particular, define normalization as the successful achievement of Jewish sovereignty, ensuring that uniquely Jewish prerogatives could be affirmed and asserted in their most natural environment.

If normalization means acceptance, then the Oslo accords are a great success. Israeli police are invited to serve in Haiti; Israeli policies go uncondemned at the U.N. Women's Conference in China; the Arab boycott begins to crumble; and Israel's foreign minister dreams of becoming the U.N. Secretary General.

The cruel irony for these Zionists was the startling phenomenon that even with sovereignty, the Jew was still a pariah. The shtetl walls fell, only to be rebuilt, as the majority of countries refused to recognize Israel and labelled her very essence as racist.

For the Orthodox, however, acceptance by the world community was never the primary goal of Zionism. The barometer of the success of Zionism was the degree to which Jewish rights were achieved. When supporters of Oslo emphasize the warm embrace of the world community achieved in exchange for Judea and Samaria, many Orthodox Jews remain unimpressed.

The Oslo accords have made life for North American Jews much easier. We are no longer stigmatized by our association with a pariah state and are no longer obliged to defend unpopular policies. With American Jews relieved of this stigma and burden, it is no great surprise that they are supportive of current Israeli policy. For the Orthodox, who are accustomed to a lifestyle which is often in tension with prevailing norms, defending Israel's unpopular policies was never a burden and association with Israel never a stigma.

The specific policies of the current Israeli administration have provided little comfort to those with deep apprehension about Israel's future. The following are some of the areas of concern:

Security — By ceding Gaza and large swaths of Judea and Samaria, Israel has opened the door to a base of Palestinian terror in the belly of Israel. Egypt's Hosni Mubarak has already complained to Israel that Gaza has turned into a base of terror against his country (even with the Sinai desert as a buffer) and Israel's military has already begun planning for Katyusha attacks which would be launched from Gaza.

The appointment of "former" terrorists (including an individual involved in the Munich massacre) as security officials for areas under Arafat's control, cannot be viewed with equanimity. The impending release of thousands of prisoners, including those with blood on their hands and future terror in their hearts, is an act which can only be perpetrated by those drunk with false hope.

Trust — Arafat has never stopped calling for Jihad. He continues to glorify terror and has even proclaimed: "We are all suicide bombers." Oslo contains but one Palestinian concession — to amend the PLO charter, a concession Israel allegedly received more than two years ago. One can only wonder how many more times Arafat can use this as a bargaining chip.

Arafat continues to describe the Oslo accords in one of two ways: either as a tactical necessity to be exploited until the day Palestinians become strong enough to implement the Cairo plan, which calls for the destruction of Israel in stages, or by conjuring up the memory of the deal made between Mohammed and the Quraish (which Mohammed subsequently broke at his convenience).

In Oslo 1, Arafat agreed to extradite accused terrorists to Israel. This has never happened. He slyly circumvents this obligation by conducting his own midnight trials ending in lightning-speed conviction, often followed days later by quiet release.

Jerusalem — To have placed Jerusalem on the negotiating table, as was done in Oslo 1, is a direct assault on Jewish history and Jewish unity. Allowing, under Oslo 2, the participation of Palestinian Arab residents of Jerusalem in the upcoming Palestinian elections directly contradicts Rabin's proclamations that Jerusalem's status will not be altered.

All of this is symptomatic of a country desperately seeking normalcy and becoming, what one commentator has called, "beggars of hope."

An additional factor which contributes to my scepticism surrounding the Oslo accords is the utter lack of consensus in Israel, which should be present when enacting such dramatic initiatives.

I fear that this process has left Israel tragically vulnerable, with borders too tempting for Arabs to ignore. If this happens, its supporters will never blame Arafat or the Arabs. What they will say is: "Had we only been more generous ... had we only never allowed the settlements ... had we only done this sooner ..." The left has always found ways to blame us for our own persecution.

Peace Process: Supporter

Jews always support darchei shalom

By RABBI HOWARD S. JOSEPH

I am cautiously in favor of the current peace process between Israel and the Palestinian Arabs. After 100 years of war, any peace process must be cautious, for the risks of failure can easily overwhelm the hope for success.

However, if those risks are solely based on security considerations, then I take comfort from the recent words of Yisrael Harel, chair of the Yesha council and an opponent of the peace process. In light of the position recently presented by some North American rabbis that concern for protecting the lives of the settlers precludes support for the peace process, Harel explained that the opposition to the peace agreements is not based on security concerns, but is ideological.

If the question were to be one of security, I would refrain from any comment, for as a rabbi I lack any security training. However, if indeed the question is ideological, then the values and teachings of Judaism are to be the area for Jews to ponder for guidance on the issue. Can we give up control of land that God has promised and given to us? Is this the paramount question? Or are there other religious considerations involved?

The peace process is a necessity because Jews should always be part of the promotion of peace. We have always given high priority to darchei shalom, the ways of peace; darchei noam, the ways of pleasantness; kavod haberiot, the dignity of human life; and numerous other fundamentals. These must be considered in any process. They are imperatives of our Sinai Covenant tradition. Jews cannot invoke them when convenient and forget them when approaching difficult issues. If these principles require us to make sacrifices then so be it. That is what having principles is all about.

I fully believe that this is indeed the land that God has promised to us. However, it may not be time yet for us to achieve the fullness of the promise. For example, if a fire rages in one's home, one will usually leave the home to save one's life. Only after the fire is extinguished would one try to return. Here too there is a fire of sorts, and it is not yet extinguished. It began with the destruction of the Temple and Jerusalem almost 2,000 years ago and still continues. We are not yet living in the Messianic era when that fire will be finally and permanently put out. Meanwhile, we wait. That is our duty. "For even though he [the Messiah] may tarry I will still wait for him ..." One day the land again will be ours. Or the Messiah may tell us that we must share that land with others in the interest of the dream of Messianic harmony.

Modern society is riddled with impatience. Immediate material rewards and gratification motivate so many of our actions. Our moral tradition has always recognized the sad irony that this attitude can only lead to frustration and discouragement. Calls of "Mashiach now" are commendable, but we cannot lose nor betray the patience that kept us for centuries. We must want the Messiah now and be ready for this to happen. But we should not act as if that time is already here.

Indeed, the main religious opposition to Zionism was based upon worries about its Messianic thrust, its "forcing the end," so to speak. This critique helped maintain a more sober religious Zionism. We must still listen to it today, even after the inspiring events witnessed during the 1967 Six Day War which aroused Messianic fervor to a remarkable degree.

In this pre-Messianic era, the conditions of our return to the land are spelled out in the Talmud. One of those is to not revolt against the nations. The United Nations' sanction of the creation of the State of Israel in 1947 seems to fit with that requirement. That Israel will live securely within internationally recognized boundaries after a successful peace process would be a next step.

Already the standing of the state has increased. Numerous previously hostile nations have now recognized Israel and established diplomatic and economic ties. The respect for Israel has increased in the world. These events have religious value. They are answers to our High Holy Day prayer: Give honor to Your people.

Any lands being surrendered have never been formally annexed by any Israeli government. Nor does any major Israeli political party advocate such an action. There is not much room to think that matters would be very different if Likud were to gain power in the near future. They have been critical of current policy but have not suggested any alternatives. Nor will they satisfy the extreme nationalists, religious or secular, by incorporating the territories currently being administered into the state.

Territorial concessions that lead to peace will not bring discouragement to world Jewry. We will still be proud of Israel's numerous accomplishments over the past decades and inspired by the flourishing of a free secure land that will soon have the largest Jewish population in the world. We will still support numerous projects and institutions that help build the society and give us a share in that endeavor. We will visit and send our children to visit and study even more than we do today.

Meanwhile, we pray that Israel's leaders will be blessed with wisdom and the strength to stay the course. Their ability to walk the fine lines and risky paths of peace will seriously impact on our future. Strength and vigilance will still be necessary for decades to come until all the hostility of the past 100 years will be replaced by compatibility, coexistence and cooperation.

Rabbi Howard Joseph is the spiritual leader of the Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue in Montreal.

Opinions

The kingmaker in 1996?

Many view the next Israeli election — which will be held in the fall of 1996 — as a critical choice between two visions of the future of the state. The substance of these arguments will be analyzed in depth between now and then, and all indications are that the election campaign will be heated and emotional. But in Israeli politics, like anywhere else, just as much is determined by personal political agendas and rivalries.

By Shira Herzog

In 1996, Israeli voters will cast two ballots for the first time. One will be for their candidate of choice for the position of prime minister, in a direct election. The second will be for their party of choice for the Knesset, in a system of proportional representation that has always been used. (This is the result of a compromise conclusion to a lengthy debate over electoral reform that failed to bring a constituency-based system to Israel.) A second, unusual phenomenon is the number of parties that will be running in the "space" between Labor and Likud, hoping to attract disenchanted voters away from both large parties.

Three such parties have already emerged, each with its own distinct message. They are the Third Way, led by Avigdor Kehalani and Dan Shomron, motivated largely by concerns over the future of the Golan; Natan Sharansky's party, motivated by concerns of new Russian immigrants; and David Levy's breakaway party from the Likud, the National-Social party, motivated largely by the personal rivalry and enmity between David Levy and Likud leader Benjamin Netanyahu.

Levy, a veteran Likud politician who was viewed as a strong voice within Likud ranks for Israelis of Middle Eastern origin, was a cabinet minister in the Menachem Begin and Yitzhak Shamir governments and a contender for the Likud leadership against Netanyahu in a bitter and acrimonious race. The ensuing feud quickly became personal, and the inevitable result from both men's perspective was Levy's decision to break away. Levy, a warm, emotional populist leader who advocates an activist social agenda on behalf of disadvantaged Israelis, and who has been associated with the centrist, pragmatic elements in Likud, believes he can appeal to disenfranchised members of Likud, as well as to many Israelis who are floating somewhere between the right and the left.

In the Israeli system of proportional representation, where 1.5 per cent of the popular vote grants a party a Knesset seat, a party with three or four seats has often held the balance of power, and its choice of either of the two large parties as a coalition partner has determined who will lead the government. Any one of the three new parties in the "centre" may find itself in such a pivotal position. For Levy, there will be an added dimension. He has already announced that he also intends to run as a candidate in the direct election for prime minister, along with Netanyahu and Yitzhak Rabin.

For all practical purposes, only a leader of one of the two large parties can be prime minister of Israel. If only Netanyahu and Rabin compete in the election, one of them will get a majority on the first ballot. Other politicians may decide to help or hinder either of the two main candidates by joining the race. In return, they may get promises of a senior cabinet post from either of the main candidates who wants them to run — or withdraw.

Levy has not declared his choice of government leader in 1996. His stated purpose is to run and win in the direct election for prime minister and to head the next government. Realistically, though, he will have to decide which of the other two candidates to back. His positions on the peace process place him in the centre, but in themselves do not rule out cooperation with either Labor or Likud. He believes that Israel should proceed now to negotiate the final arrangements for the territories, and his map is a variation on the old Allon plan, including blocs of settlements that will remain untouched. He does not object to negotiations with Yasser Arafat. On the Golan, he has hinted at a willingness to consider territorial concessions, but he has also said he believes no breakthrough with Syria will take place before the next Israeli election. These positions are not much different from those of other "dovish" Likud members or "hawkish" Labor members. They are virtually identical to those of the Kehalani group, which is a breakaway from Labor.

But in the case of Levy, there is the apparently unbridgeable chasm with Netanyahu. This means that from Rabin's perspective, any vote given to Levy in the direct election for prime minister is a vote that isn't going to Netanyahu in what may well be a close race. If Levy steps out of the race after the first ballot, and in the process makes a deal with Rabin that will give him a senior cabinet post, he may advise his supporters from the first ballot to vote for Rabin on the second ballot. From today's vantage point, therefore, it appears that Levy may be the kingmaker in the election of 1996.

A frightening parallel

The Spanish Inquisition seems to be a never-ending attraction for researchers and history buffs. It represents one of the great enigmas of national, cultural and religious development. Here we find a country which, in the early Middle Ages, could be counted amongst the most tolerant of all societies anywhere, and a few hundred years later it had to be reckoned amongst the most intolerant lands of any period in history. As is so often the case, the Jews were the linchpins of this development and they represented the cogent proof that when something goes wrong with society, they are the first to suffer the consequences. That was most certainly so with Spain from the years 900 to 1500 and beyond.

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut

The eminent historian Benzion Netanyahu has now written his second book on the subject, and this time it is nearly 1,400 impressive pages long. Netanyahu, a renowned scholar, is the father of Benjamin (the head of the Likud Party in Israel) and of the late Jonathan, who led the raid on Entebbe in 1976 and was killed in the effort. His father dedicates the book to him "with unrelieved grief to the memory of my beloved son."

It was a historical given in the past that the Inquisition was primarily a religious institution, designed to wipe out heresy. But now Netanyahu has shown conclusively that religion was only the foil and the tool in accomplishing a totally different end. It was to get rid of a new successful and prosperous Spanish class which consisted primarily of men and women who had formerly been Jews and who, in most instances, had been good and faithful Christians for generations. Contrary to earlier wisdom, they were not Marranos in the sense of being hidden Jews. Far from it, they were loyal Christians, but their success made the old Christian leadership of the country their bitter enemy. The Establishment felt that they were being displaced by the newcomers and they encouraged the Church to do what they themselves could not do: eliminate untold thousands of their competitors by accusing them of being Jews at heart and in practice, and condemning them thereby to the auto-da-fé. In sum, this was a political, economic and cultural development which sailed under the title "Inquisition," but inquired only whether one's grandparents or great-grandparents were Jews. It became a racial pursuit and that was enough to condemn people to the fire. Being a faithful Christian meant nothing, for Jews were considered an evil race.

Needless to say, this interpretation of history raises the spectre of a similar development in our own century.

Netanyahu draws that parallel in no uncertain terms: Nazism rode to success on the back of racial anti-Semitism — and the latter too was fuelled not by religious, but by social, political and economic factors. Both Nazism and the Inquisition, having started with the annihilation of Jews, overreached themselves in the end and became self-destructive.

Erna Paris in her study, The End of Days, a well written and easy to read account of the same theme, reaches similar conclusions, which will be examined and discussed for some time to come. The book is distinguished by the comparison of Spanish times with our era and its potential for destabilization. The parallel is both frightening and challenging.

Healing needed after Quebec vote

As I write these words, the referendum is several days off. A sense of gloom pervades anglophone and allophone communities in Montreal. The vote is too close to call, with the Yes side gaining momentum since Lucien Bouchard took over the helm. The smug confidence of some federalist forces early on has given way to real concern, if not panic. The financial markets have already sent out their first signals, pushing the dollar down and interest rates up. I will make no predictions.

By Morton Weinfeld

English speakers, who are overwhelmingly No supporters, feel a sense of despair, of depression. In many English language institutions, such as schools or hospitals, the referendum seems to be on most people's minds. There is little laughter in their voices or bounce in their steps. In some places you can cut the tension with a knife. Even francophones are anxious; a colleague told me that her mother has not been able to sleep for a week.

Some federalists remain optimistic. They continue to predict a No victory, and this seems to be the view of professional pollsters and survey researchers. The argument is that the Undecideds will break largely to the No side. By this time, we will know if they are right. But even a close No victory will not lead to euphoria.

Jews in Quebec, who are also No supporters, share in the anxiety. Given the large numbers of elderly in the Montreal Jewish community, including a fair number of Holocaust survivors, the fear of abrupt political change, of social and economic instability, is even more acute. The Jewish community has allied itself publicly with the Italian and Hellenic communities on the No side. There will be strains on the Jewish community following the referendum, regardless of the outcome.

Nationalist community

What is unclear is whether a narrow No victory will help rebuild the self-confidence of the Jewish community. Regardless of the referendum vote, it will be important to mend possibly broken fences with the Parti Quebecois government and the nationalist community in general.

The issue of anti-Semitism is not one that has surfaced in public and does not seem to animate most Montreal Jews at this time. Most fear the general political instability, the economic uncertainty that surrounds the debate. They are devoted to Canada, with its tradition of tolerance. However, they are also increasingly integrated into Quebec society and speak French and share increasing personal and professional contacts with French Quebecers. The quality and the warmth of Jewish life in Montreal remain extremely high. What is uncertain is the nature of the surrounding environment.

Unsettling references have been made in the Yes campaign to the suspect vote of ethnic minorities or the need for more "white babies" in Quebec. One hopes that such comments will not be symptomatic of a renewed brand of exclusive, intolerant French nationalism.

In fact, the Yes camp is a coalition of many forces, some liberal and some conservative, and includes doctrinaire separatists and strategic supporters hoping for a more egalitarian constitutional arrangement. Regardless of the outcome, that coalition might not last after the referendum.

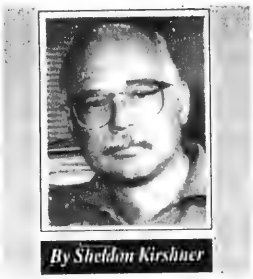
The Pequist leadership has a tendency to seek to blame others — usually Ottawa or English Canada — for any difficulties it encounters. Even the run on the dollar in the week before the election was not the fault of the threat of separation, but of colluding Bay Street financiers or Finance Minister Paul Martin's warning of one million threatened jobs.

If things go badly in a post-Yes Quebec, or if frustrated sovereigntists seek revenge after a close No victory, minorities, including Jews, might well be targeted. Jewish communal leaders in Quebec, and in the rest of Canada, should work to strengthen the liberal elements of French Quebec society, and hasten the healing process. It will be a difficult, delicate challenge.

The Kirshner File

Albert Speer regretted his Faustian bargain

In the second half of 1977, Gitta Sereny — a British journalist with an abiding interest in the Third Reich — received two unsolicited letters from Albert Speer, who had been one of Adolf Hitler's closest confidants.



By Sheldon Kirshner

The letters marked a watershed in Sereny's professional career.

They triggered a series of events which recently culminated with the publication of Albert Speer: His Battle With Truth (Random House, $45), an exhaustive examination of Speer's culpability in the extermination of six million Jews during the Holocaust.

"I probed Speer with a critical eye, probably more than any other Nazi has been probed," said Sereny in an interview at her publisher's office in Toronto, her 65th since she began to promote her critically acclaimed tome.

More than a decade in the making, the book is based on extensive conversations with Speer and his voluminous private papers.

It is a cautionary Faustian tale of an intelligent, educated, well-bred man who struck a bargain with the devil and lived to regret it.

For the rest of his days, Speer, who died in 1981, was tormented and obsessed by the Holocaust. "The murder of the Jews was central to his radical condemnation of Hitler, central to the awareness of his own guilt and absolutely central to his thoughts for 35 years," writes Sereny.

Speer, Hitler's architect, was appointed minister of armaments and munitions in February 1942, thus becoming the second most powerful person in Germany. Speer performed brilliantly, and Hitler appreciated his stellar contribution to Nazi Germany's war effort. By 1945, German factories were producing more tanks and planes and artillery pieces than they had in 1939. In this respect, Speer was instrumental in prolonging the war by at least a year.

At his trial in Nuremberg in 1946, Speer admitted responsibility for the use of slave labor by his ministry, but steadfastly denied all knowledge of the Final Solution. Found guilty of war crimes, he was sentenced to 20 years in prison. His deputy, Fritz Saukel, was executed. He had acknowledged that he had ordered the transport of Jews to concentration camps.

Following his release, Speer wrote two best-sellers — Inside the Third Reich and Spandau Diaries. Filled with contrition, they infuriated his former comrades in the Nazi movement.

In 1977, Speer, living in splendid retirement in Germany, contacted Sereny. She and a colleague had written an article for the London Sunday Times in which they had discredited the claims of David Irving, a British revisionist historian who had claimed in a book, Hitler's War, that Hitler had not known about the Holocaust until October 1943 at the earliest.

In his first letter, Speer not only thanked her for the article, but attacked Irving, saying it was "ludicrous" for anyone to claim that the genocide of the Jews could have been anyone's idea but Hitler's. The fact that there was no documentary evidence of a command from Hitler calling for the systematic killing of Jews was irrelevant, Speer said. Besides, he added, Hitler issued his most critical orders verbally.

Sereny, who had been raised in Vienna and educated in Britain, was intrigued by Speer, of whom she possessed some knowledge. She had personally seen him in the dock at Nuremberg. She had read his books. She had watched him many times on television.

Sereny, now 72, had no intention of responding to Speer. But after another one of his letters arrived in the mail, in which he confessed that her book on Treblinka commandant Franz Stangl had given him sleepless nights, she telephoned Speer.

This, in turn, led to an assignment from the Sunday Times for a profile on Speer. In April 1978, she and her husband, a renowned photographer, met Speer at his home in Heidelberg.

Sereny, who had witnessed the 1934 Nazi party congress in Nuremberg and had tended to displaced persons in Germany after the war, came well prepared.

"What I didn't yet know, and wasn't to learn until much later, was that he was consumed with guilt about the murder of the Jews. It was a long time before I grew to like Speer, but by the end of our first three weeks together, I fully believed, and loved, that feeling of guilt in him."

In Albert Speer: His Battle With Truth, Sereny claims that Speer was preconditioned to Hitler's anti-Semitic ravings, possibly because he was an "instinctive" anti-Semite himself. "Practically all Germans, especially the upper classes, were anti-Semites," she said of that period.

"I cannot understand anti-Semitism," Sereny mused. "It is so foreign to me. It is a feeling I cannot understand."

Speer, Sereny suggests, was an innate anti-Semite who harbored no particular aversion toward Jews. Indeed, he continued to associate with Jewish acquaintances after throwing in his lot with the Nazis. In addition, he was proud that his letters and speeches bore no anti-Semitic references, and that he had never taken part in anti-Semitic activities.

Nevertheless, the persecution of German Jews was of marginal concern to Speer. He was basically indifferent to the indignities and depravations they endured. Kristallnacht, for example, evoked in him a revulsion against disorder rather than a visceral reaction against barbarity.

In Sereny's estimation, Speer was not "consciously aware" of the Holocaust in 1942 when he was named minister of armaments and munitions. Speer, she argues, was entirely preoccupied with increasing war production, and associated the removal of Jews from German cities with "the needs for security, and for labor."

Yet Speer's professed ignorance of the Final Solution does not square with the facts.

He was probably present at a momentous meeting in Posen, Poland, in October 1943, in which Heinrich Himmler graphically spelled out the real meaning of the Final Solution. Speer admits that he was in Posen on the day of Himmler's speech, but cannot remember hearing it.

Even if this denial is true, and Sereny is not convinced it is, Sereny is certain that Hitler discussed Himmler's speech with Speer the day after it was delivered.

As well, Josef Goebbels' diaries prove that Speer heard Hitler speak of "liquidating" Jews "from Europe's life."

Hitler, Sereny observed, never directly told Speer about the Holocaust per se. He conveyed that damning information to only four collaborators. Moreover, Speer never really took Hitler's threats against the Jews seriously.

"Nothing I ever heard him say made me think, even for a moment, that he had any intention of killing them," Speer told Sereny. "Killing, that was unthinkable."

After Posen, however, Speer must have grasped the terrible truth. Yet Speer, who adored Hitler, was unable imagine a crime of such magnitude and blocked it out of his mind, Sereny said. As a result, Speer believed his own lies. "The blocking effect can make you believe you are not lying."

Speer's gradual disillusionment with Hitler was hastened by a visit to the infamous Dora labor camp, but even this traumatic event did not prompt him to break his ties with Hitler or to join the resistance movement.

In Nuremberg, in 1946, Speer confessed that he had "to share total responsibility for all that had happened" during the Third Reich. But it was not until 1977, in a deposition to the South African (Jewish) Board of Deputies that Speer came closest to associating himself, for the first time, directly with the Holocaust. As he put it: "To this day I still consider my main guilt to be my tacit acceptance of the persecution and murder of millions of Jews."

Speer, Sereny concludes, never forgave himself for having loved Hitler. But he doubtless assuaged his guilt by anonymously contributing to several Jewish organizations in Europe and by striking up a friendship with an eccentric German-born rabbi who respected his anguish.

Torah's guidance key to Jewish continuity

By RABBI JOSEPH KELMAN

Several weeks ago we ended the High Holy Day season with Simchat Torah.

The actual name of the holiday and the manner in which we celebrate it was developed in the Diaspora after the talmudic period. This was done to give the second day of Shemini Atzeret a special celebration of its own and end the High Holy Days on a meaningful and joyous note.

Amongst the many reasons for Simchat Torah, I would like to suggest that perhaps the most important is to make sure that we continue to let the Torah be a guide and, as we say in our prayers, a tree of life and the support for the Jewish people.

During the first 23 days of Tishrei, we are very conscious of the need to strengthen our commitment to Judaism. We spend a great deal of time in prayer, as well as observing the rituals and mitzvot of the holidays both in the synagogue and at home.

Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur put us on a high spiritual plane. Then we celebrate Sukkot and through our material possessions, material blessings, calling it z'man simchateinu, the time of rejoicing and happiness. Leaving your home and going into a temporary sukkah teaches a fundamental lesson that happiness cannot be achieved which bring only momentary pleasures. Happiness comes from the realization that we must be grateful and appreciate the blessings we receive, which we far too often take for granted.

To help us in this regard, the Torah has given us concrete mitzvot, as well as teaching us right attitudes. We begin and end our day with prayers and recite blessings before and after we eat. We have laws to share material blessings and many others to remind us that we should be concerned not only to feed our bodies and enjoy a good life, but also to nurture and sustain our soul.

It is interesting that the editorial staff of The Canadian Jewish News, in establishing this column called it Rabbinic Reflections. One of the translations of the word reflection in Hebrew is histakel. This means to engage in self-introspection and reflect upon which direction in life we should take to make it meaningful to ourselves and express devotion to the Almighty.

As I reflect upon our Jewish life and upon the Jewish community in North America, I come to the conclusion that one basic perception of it is that it is a paradox. On the one hand, we can be great optimists and happy that there are more students going to day schools than ever before, more people engaged in Jewish studies and many expressing public pride as Jews living in a democratic society.

However, on the other side of the coin, probably more than 50 per cent of Jews in Toronto do not attend synagogue, even on Yom Kippur. Of those who do, a good percentage do not make synagogue and Judaism a high priority during the rest of the year.

Every day we hear the catch word continuity. Indeed, it is an important concept. To make it happen we should look at two other words with the letter C. Continuity will take place if we can successfully communicate to Jewish families the need to have a greater commitment to Jewish life. This means not only during the High Holy Day period, but with concrete observances of mitzvot at home and outside the home throughout the year.

Rosh Hashanah in Nantucket shul

By PATRICIA MYHAL
Special to The CJN

"Good evening friends. We're a big crowd tonight, so we're going to have to sit tuchis to tuchis."

With these words of the rabbi, my introduction to Rosh Hashanah services at the Nantucket synagogue began. I was there with the Blumensteins, ex-Torontonians now based in New York, who have just built a house in Nantucket.

GUEST VOICES

This announcement from the rabbi, a cheerful woman from Harvard, surprised me (I had expected a more sombre tone), but also delighted me. And the more I experienced of Rosh Hashanah, the more these words and the message behind them of family and friends feeling comfortable and at ease seemed absolutely right.

Only in the last 10 years have Jews on Nantucket been able to attend syngaogue. Nantucket (just off Cape Cod) has been for decades a quiet island with a unique flavor. In the last century, it became a vacation spot for the establishment of the north-eastern United States. It is the kind of place where people "summered," and those people on the whole shared the same cultural and ethnic background.

Until about 20 years ago, Nantucket was effectively restricted. There were some Jews who lived and vacationed there (although there were apparently no Jewish residents prior to 1920), but they were not open about being Jewish. They blended in, perhaps deliberately so. This changed some 10 years ago, when a small group of Jewish families decided to organize regular services.

Today the congregation of Shirat Ha'Yam (Song of the Sea) holds services in the basement of the Unitarian church. The church is lodged in an 1809 building that could be the model for the popular image of a New England church — white clapboard, tall steeple, fronted by an old brick sidewalk and just steps away from the cobblestone main street. Yet there is a synagogue in the basement; and the president of the synagogue, a take-charge lady lawyer from Pittsburgh, has persuaded the local bakery to make challah for Jewish holidays.

On the first day of Rosh Hashanah, some 300 people squeezed into every nook and cranny of the basement. Many of the men were wearing red yarmulkes. I learned later that these were designed especially for the congregation — in the well-known Nantucket red color, with a circle of whales around the edge.

What struck me most was the participation of children during the service. Lev, my friends' son, took an active part in the Hebrew readings, but then he's greating up for his bar mitzvah.

After the service, we went for dinner to the home of a Jewish woman who has been coming to the island for more than 20 years. I had the feeling that she may have been, until recently, one of those who blended in. I sensed also that she was pleased to now be able to practise her religion in a more public way. We were a dozen or so at dinner, almost all Jewish. We ate brisket, honey and apples (Lev explained that the apples represented the world) and honey cake. The synagogue service and the convivial dinner all seemed to be parts of one whole — a warm, family-oriented expression of goodwill.

On the next day there was the ceremony of tashlich. Under a bright blue sky, we gathered at a picture-postcard lighthouse in Nantucket harbor. After some remarks by the rabbi, we walked to the edge of the ocean where we tossed pieces of bread in a symbolic casting off of our sins. (Actually we had forgotten our bread, so we used crumbled cookies stolen from the kids' snack. But we thought that wouldn't detract from the gesture.) Later we learned that, instead of tossing bread, we could have turned out our pockets and hems, an even more personal symbol and one that to me, as a non-Jew, seemed particularly evocative of the Jewish experience in the 20th century.

The impression that remains with me is of the warmth and hospitality that infused this celebration and of a community's determination to create a public religious life in a place that, not too many years ago, was less than welcoming.

Rabbi known for ahavas Yisroel

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Rabbi Avraham Yaacov Glucowsky, a longtime teacher at Eitz Chaim Schools and a founder of the Lubavitch community in Toronto, died suddenly on Oct. 19, a few hours after his return from Israel. He was 66.

Born in Elizabeth, N.J., he began his teaching career in New York. He soon moved to Nashville, Tenn., where he met and married his wife, Frances. The couple moved to Detroit and finally, in 1959, to Toronto.

He taught at the Eitz Chaim night school as well as taking up duties as executive director of Chabad Lubavitch. In 1963, he became a full-time teacher at Eitz Chaim, where he remained until his death.

Former Eitz Chaim principal Rabbi Shneur Weinberg, a brother-in-law, called him a "real gentleman," whose "warmth and ahavas yisroel touched thousands."

He was a very effective teacher, Rabbi Weinberg said, and was always willing to give help to younger staff.

"He was a rare breed. He combined the professionalism of today with the mesirat nefesh [all-encompassing dedication] of yesterday."

Rabbi Glucowsky was known for bringing many back to Jewish observance through the warmth of his personality, his beaming smile and his non-judgemental nature.

Rabbi Yosef Gansburg, educational director of Chabad Lubavitch of Southern Ontario, said that at any gathering or at shul, "he would be the first to go over and welcome people."

As well, said Rabbi Gansburg, "he was a life force behind the [Chabad] organization in Toronto — he was a part of every major program we did.

"There will be a tremendous void with his passing."

His last High Holy Days were spent fulfilling one of his lifelong dreams — to lead Rosh Hashonah and Yom Kippur services in Israel, which he did at the Chabad synagogue of Rehovot, where his son is the rabbi.

Rabbi Glucowsky is survived by his wife Frances, children Rabbi Menachem Mendel Glucowsky of Rehovot, Rabbi Moishe Meyer of New York, Yechiel of Toronto, Lakey Silber of Chicago, Chana Odi Shagalow of New Hope, Minn., and 21 grandchildren.

He also leaves four sisters, Temi Beck, Simi Teigman, Marsha Tekuzener and Shulamit Budow.

A new page in Jewish history

TORONTO — Were it not for the creation of the State of Israel, Emil Fackenheim tends to think that Jews would have virtually disappeared as a result of the demoralizing effect of the Holocaust.

"The understanding of the horrors that took place during the Holocaust are only beginning to sink in now," the noted philosopher said in a lecture here last week sponsored by B'nai Brith Canada. "It doesn't get easier with the years. It gets harder."

Fackenheim, a former professor of philosophy at the University of Toronto, made aliyah in 1983 and is now a faculty member of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem.

What applies to individual Holocaust survivors who built new lives applies to Israel collectively, Fackenheim believes. "If we have the strength, hope and courage, then there's got to be a new page in Jewish history.

"Don't let the hope die a second time," he urged.

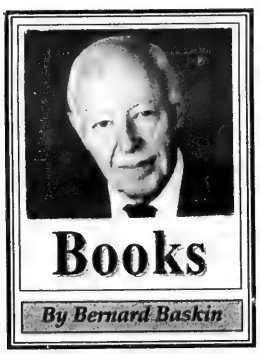
Yiddish literature lives on



All My Yesterdays Were Steps: The Selected Poems of Dora Teitelboim, Ktav Publishing Co. $25 US

An Anthology Of Modern Yiddish Poetry, selected and translated by Ruth Whitman, Wayne State University Press $16.95 paperbound

Found Treasures: Stories by Yiddish Women Writers, Second Story Press (paperbound)

For the better part of a millenium (900 to 1900), Yiddish was the principal tongue of Ashkenazi Jews, who by the end of the 19th century, represented about 90 per cent of world Jewry. Though it developed in central Europe, Yiddish does not have a clearly defined homeland. Most linguistic historians define it as a west-Germanic language.

It is estimated that in 1940, over 10 million Jews around the world spoke Yiddish. Forty years later that number had been reduced to about a third of that figure and most of these people were elderly and unable to pass the tradition on to their children. In ultra-Orthodox circles, Yiddish is still preferred for everyday secular use and approximately two million continue to use the language.

Stalin murdered the major Yiddish writers of the Soviet Union and Hitler murdered writers and readers alike. Tragically, a large Yiddish speaking mass is gone forever. A number of universities now teach Yiddish and an increasing number of North American-born Jews are learning Yiddish at school, rather than from their parents. But there is no likelihood that Yiddish will live and thrive as before.

About 100 new works of fiction, poetry and non-fiction are published each year in Yiddish — most of them in Israel.

Born in Poland in 1914, Dora Teitelboim came to the United States in 1932. For over 50 years, this prolific Yiddish poet expressed her deep concerns for the problems of humanity in her poems of social protest. She died in Tel Aviv in 1992.

This attractive volume of poems selected from eight of her books (1944-1991) contains both the original Yiddish and the sensitive translations of Aaron Kramer. The eminent Yiddish poet Abraham Shlonsky has praised her work as derived from the sounds of her particular nigen (tune), "from the wings of her imagination and from the colors of her style."

An Anthology of Modern Yiddish Poetry is a rich treasury of 20th century Yiddish poetry. This third bilingual edition, augmented by 20 new poems by women, highlighted the literary output of 14 Eastern European-born poets, most of whom eventually immigrated to the United States.

The 72 poems are lovingly selected and translated by Prof. Ruth Whitman. This definitive anthology will be cherished by all lovers of Yiddish.

Found Treasures contains stories by 18 Yiddish women writers who explore a wide variety of themes: daily life in the shtetls and cities of Eastern Europe; new challenges and problems in North America, Palestine and Israe; and survival during the Holocaust and afterwards. A brief review cannot do justice to the social, historical and cultural background of these writings — previously unpublished from Yiddish — that help retrieve the world of our foremothers.

The paperbound volume contains a glossary, bibliographies and photographs, as well as an introduction by Irena Klepfisz, entitled, A Feminist Introduction to Yiddish Writers. She indicates, "The classical writers left us images of Jewish life which lend themselves to nostalgia and to the fabrication of a coherent and orderly past. These women's stories do not allow for such fabrication. More resistant to nostalgia, they provide a past which cannot be romanticized and which, for women, does not differ in many ways from the 'liberated' present in its contradictions and challenges."

All three volumes under review underline the sentiments of I.B. Singer: "One can find in the Yiddish tongue and the Yiddish style expressions of pious joy, lust for life, longing for the Messiah, patience and deep appreciation of human individuality."

גידי קורן

על כבוד :

בעיתוני ראש השנה בירך הממונה על שגרירות ישראל בקנדה את קוראי העיתון. כמקובל הוא איחל להם ולבני משפחותיהם את כל מה שמאחלים לעצמם אנשים: שלום, ביטחון, בריאות ו....כבוד, כבוד? כן, הוא אמר "כבוד"! ממתי יהודי מתפלל לכבוד? הרי אמרו חכמינו: "מי שרודף אחר הכבוד, הכבוד בורח מפניו." אולי היתה זו פליטת קולמוס של דיפלומט ואולי לא, מה שבטוח: הרבה אנשים מתפללים לכבוד למרות שזה בניגוד מוחלט לרוח היהדות. יותר מכך: בעוד שרוח היהדות מעודדת מתן בסתר, צניעות ושפל רוח, - מי שתורם לבית הכנסת סכומים גדולים זוכה לשבת ליד ארון הקודש ועולה לתורה. מדוע? האם אוהב יותר את בעלי הכבוד? באותו עניין סיפר לי חבר את הסיפור הבא: "בני למד בבית ספר יהודי בטורונטו. יום אחד צילצלה המורה ושאלה את אשתי: תגידי, נתת היום לילד עשרים דולאר לקופת הקרן הקיימת? אשתי נדהמה כשהתברר לה שבנינו 'תרם' סכום זה לקופת הקרן הקיימת. בירור קצר עם הילד בן השבע העלה שבבית הספר מקובל שהילד שתורם הכי הרבה לקופה זוכה בכבוד ומרים את דגל המדינה ודגל קנדה לפני כל בית הספר. מה עשה בנינו? הוא לקח מהארנק של אימו עשרים דולאר כדי לזכות בכבוד הנ"ל! למותר לציין שזה היה השבוע האחרון שלו באותו בית ספר." עד כאן החבר. סך הכל "חינך" בית הספר הנ"ל את הילדים שכסף קונה כבוד, כך שבשיהיו גדולים ירצו לתרום כדי לקבל כבוד. מדוע לא להעניק את הכבוד למי שעזר לחבר, או שסתם עשה מעשה טוב שלא על מנת לקבל פרס? לא נעים, אבל זהו חלק מביך ביותר בחוויה הישראלית והיהודית כאחת. הרבה אנשים מנופחים שמחפשים כבוד. אישית - לא יצא לי לדבר עם אלוקים, אבל אם הבנתי טוב את מה שאמרו נביאיו - הוא דווקא אוהב אנשים צנועים. אבל שישאר בינינו.

עופרה:

במהלך הימים הנוראים, כשקצת נשבר לי ממשפט סימפסון, מהשאלה של קויבק ושאר נושאי חולין, דפדפתי לי בין ערוצי הטלביזיה בחיפוש אחרי משהוא לנשמה. ואז עליתי על שידור חוזר עם אמנית ישראלית שמביאה עונג לאנשים רבים בכל העולם. עופרה ! לא, סליחה, לא עופרה חזה, אלא דווקא נגנת הצ'לו עופרה הרנוי. יצא לי לראות את עופרה מנגנת מספר פעמים אך ללא ספק התוכנית הזאת "הוציאה" אותה בצורה מרגשת. היה תענוג לראות אותה מדברת בלהט על פרוייקט ויואלדי שלקחה על עצמה, ובמהלכו היא מקליטה את הקונצרטים הרבים שכתב ויואלדי לצ'לו ושרבים מהם לא הוקלטו מעולם. לטעמי האישי - מה שאולי לא עזר בעבר לעופרה להתפתח במהירות שהיא ראויה לה היא עובדת היותה, בנוסף לצ'לאנית וירטואוזית, גם אישה יפה מאוד. היא נטתה לבחור לא אחת מה שמסווג כ"מוסיקה קלאסית קלה". השילוב של מוסיקה כזו עם הופעתה החיצונית הנלבבת "עזר" למבקרים מוסיקליים ושאר שוטים לחדביק לה תוית של מוסיקאית "שטחית". סליחה - מה שאני ראיתי בטלביזיה היה רציני, מענג מאוד לא שטחי. השיחה עם עופרה היתה אינטלגנטית, עדינה ובאמת עושה טוב בנשמה. צ'לו, אם עוד לא סיפרתי לכם, הוא הכלי האהוב עלי בין כלי המיתר. אז אם אתם מחפשים רעיון כמתנה : תקליטים של עופרה הרנוי זו התשובה בשבילכם. גם ישראלי , גם מענג, וגם יחשבו שאתם אינטלגנטים. אבל שישאר בינינו.

Three Year milestone for UJA Campaign pledges

Over $24 million has been pledged so far for the 1996 UJA Campaign. Including gifts secured for 1997 and 1998, the Three Year Vision total now exceeds $52 million as the Campaign heads into its final month.

For 1996 alone, the amount raised to date is well ahead of last year. However, Campaign co-chair Carol Kassel stresses that, "although the numbers seem impressive, the money we raise can barely keep up with increasing needs. We have a long way to go."

Provincial budget cuts, she pointed out, are imposing heavy financial demands on the Jewish community, which has always allocated funds to dignify the lives of the Jewish poor. Kassel cautioned that budget trimming is only going to get worse.

Campaign Co-chair Charles Gold is thrilled with the community's response to The Three Year Vision. "It's exceeding all our expectations," he said. "In some of our divisions, up to 80% of UJA donors have made three year commitments."

UJA adopted The Three Year Vision in order to create a stable financial footing for the future and free up canvasser time to contact non-contributors.

Toronto's United Jewish Appeal is the only one in the world to have embarked on a Three Year Vision.

Carol Kassel says "you can feel the excitement" surrounding this campaign. Kassel and Charles Gold are co-chairing the 1996 UJA Campaign.

Counting down the last stretch

With just three weeks to go in the 1996 Campaign, UJA is mounting an all out effort to canvass close to 15,000 remaining cards.

Countdown '96, from November 5-9, chaired by Richard Sadowski and Carole Sterling, is a week's worth of telethons for the final lap of the Campaign.

"Each telethon shift is worth $10,000," noted Sadowski. "That's a staggering figure. It covers one quarter of the total cost of supplying needy Jews in our community with Passover food and it helps 10 Ethiopian children attend a summer youth program in Israel."

Countdown '96 is providing prizes to volunteers through ongoing Bingo games at the telethons plus a light meal and free day-care (based on demand).

Although the co-chairs are working hard to create an enjoyable atmosphere for telethon canvassers, Sadowski is clearly focused on the significance of Countdown '96. "What we do is so important," he said. "I think the fun is a bonus. Every time I look at a vacant chair or a vacant phone I feel that we've come up short."

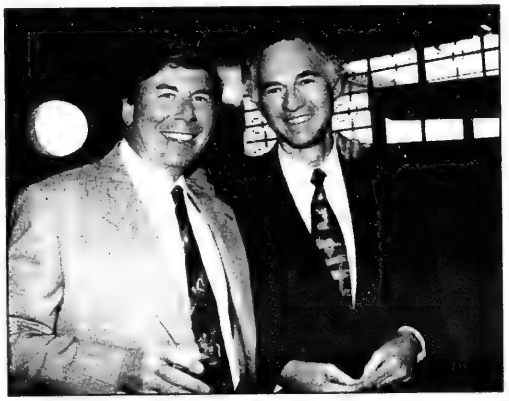
Cuts take toll

Reena President Rob Berkovitz recently offered UJA leaders a tough assessment of how provincial budget cut acks will affect his agency. He's predicting longer waiting lists and perhaps reduced service other speakers at the UJA Leadership Breakfast were JFCS board member Paul Forman, and Morris Zbar, Director of the Federation's Community Planning and Allocations Department.

UJA Division Highlights



The Professions Cabinet lead by Eric Bornstein (L) and Dr. Saul Kendal has topped $2.5 million in campaign pledges.

• The Major Gifts Division, chaired by Michael Daren, Debbie Kimel and Charles Winograd, has raised close to $6 million. On November 12, the Division will hold a gala event at the Canadian Broadcasting Centre's Glenn Gould Studio, 250 Front Street West. The gala, chaired by Honey Sherman and Howard Sokolowski, is sponsored by the Royal Bank of Canada Real Estate Banking Group.

• The Lawyers Division, under the leadership of Rick Orzy, Earl Altman, and Bonnie Croll has raised, to date, almost $800,000 for the 1996 Campaign. Fifty percent of the donors have committed themselves to the Three Year Vision. On October 24, renowned criminal lawyer Edward L. Greenspan, Q.C. spoke to 250 on the ethics of criminal law. The event was jointly organized by the Lawyers and Accountants Divisions.

• The Physicians Division, co-chaired by Howard Price and Stephen Gottesman, is doing exceptionally well for the 1996 campaign, raising $785,000 to date. Physicians Division members will be attending a private meeting at Queen's Park with Ontario's Health Minister, Jim Wilson, to discuss District Health Council restructuring and contract re- negotiation.

• To date, the Construction Professionals Division, co-chaired by Lawrence Glazer and Henry Petroff has raised $73,000 for the 1996 campaign and $175,000 for the Three Year Vision. On November 13, in conjuction with Holocaust Education Week, the Division has invited architect Daniel Libeskind to speak on Private Mourning in Public Architecture: Memory and the Holocaust at the Design Exchange, 234 Bay Street.

• The Arts and Entertainment Division, co-chaired by Richard Ross and Howard Lichtman, has raised $620,000 for the Three Year Vision and is planning an event for December 7 called The Business of Entertainment. Jointly organized with the Investment Division and Young Business Network, the event will feature Moses Znaimer, Paul Godfrey and Robert Lantos as guest speakers.

An address by renowned lawyer Eddie Greenspan captivated some 300 fellow lawyers and accountants at UJA's Outlook '96.

Israel the prize for Three Year Vision subscribers

Ten lucky UJA contributors will soon be visiting Israel, thanks to Air Canada. They were the winners of a UJA draw last month in which everyone who made a three pledge before October 3 was eligible.

Sylvia Fine, a veteran UJA canvasser, could hardly believe her good fortune. She hopes to go in time for Passover and her nephew's bar mitzvah.

Stephen Lidsky, a former co-chair of UJA's Pharmacists Division and a 30 year volunteer, said "it was exhilarating to be picked as one of the winners."

"I've never won anything in my life," added Lidsky, who also plans to visit family in Israel.

"They didn't have to twist my arm to pledge", noted Elki Adler, "but it was really wonderful to have won the ticket." My niece will be having a bat mitzva in Israel soon and hopefully now I'll be able to join her for the simcha."

The other 7 winners were Rachel Nisker, Marla Kleinberg, Ruth Cohen, Scott Staiman, Liesa Collier, M.J. Dremer and Joanne Katz-Silverstein.

Major Gifts gala

UJA's Major Gifts Event is going to be a date with history.

On November 12, Major Gifts donors will be celebrating the past, present and future of our Jewish community. The event is being co-chaired by Honey Sherman and Howard Sokolowski.

The evening will feature a buffet supper and dessert reception featuring entertainment by the Amici Quartet with members of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra and the Sound of Music trio starring Russian artists. Also scheduled is the presentation of an honour roll for Major Gifts contributors.

"Honey and I both think this event is a first class way of saying 'thank you' to our major contributors," said Sokolowski.

The gala, sponsored by the Royal Bank of Canada Real Estate Banking Group is taking place Nov. 12, 6 p.m. in the Barbara Frum Atrium and the Glenn Gould Studio at the Canadian Broadcasting Centre, 250 Front St. W.

The UJA Women's Campaign

It's a life-giving gift

Marlene Axmith, Chairperson, UJA Women's Campaign

Chairperson,
UJA Women's Campaign

Several years ago I was fortunate to meet Danny Siegel known to many as the "mitzvah man". During our discussion, Danny introduced me to the following wisdom from the Talmud: "Just as every single thread in a piece of cloth can become a part of a magnificent garment, so every coin - even a Perutah (the smallest unit of money) can add up to a magnificent sum for tzedakah." (Bava Batra).

This saying not only speaks to the collective power of every individual, it characterizes the strength of Women's Campaign. In 1938, the founders of Women's Campaign raised $50,000. Today, we reach out to approximately 8,000 women, who contribute $4 million for use in our community, in Israel and around the world.

Our collective financial power is fueled by the dedication of more than 250 volunteers. On any given day, at almost any given hour, you'll find "woman power" at work on behalf of UJA.

In early spring, our Campaign team wholeheartedly adopted The Three Year Vision. Through the summer months, canvassers, realizing this new approach demanded new techniques, turned out for training in record numbers. Last month, they enthusiastically worked the phones on Super Sunday and many other scheduled telethons. In the months ahead, they will continue to demonstrate their dedication until Campaign's end.

Although raising funds is our major priority, it is not the only area in which Women's Campaign is involved. This year, we've introduced several new initiatives in conjunction with Jewish Women's Federation. Among them: co-sponsorship of a speaking engagement by Anna Rosmus - "The Nasty Girl", partnership in Shalom Toronto to welcome our city's newcomers, and a wonderful learning series, Timeless Treasures, for women, taught by women, based on Jewish text. We have formed a new Volunteer Placement Committee to reactivate women who have worked with us in the past, and our Young Women's Outreach program is ready to launch its winter/spring series.

Women have always understood the importance of tzedakah. Very often they have been at the forefront of social change. Today, as a community, we are at a crossroads. More and more we will be asked to give our support to those who need it. We are in the midst of a "crisis in caring" - one which I'm confident the women of this community will address through Women's Campaign. Unlike our early days, when donations by women were looked upon as "plus-giving", the $4 million we raise together today is "life-giving."

Holocaust Education Week breaks new ground

The 15th annual Holocaust Education Week, from November 9-19, has something for everyone interested in learning about the darkest period in modern Jewish history. The event is coordinated by the Federation's Holocaust Education Week Committee.

Lectures, films, workshops and discussion groups will be held throughout the city on topics such as Jewish resistance, the rise of anti-Semitism then and now and Canada's role in dealing with Holocaust refugees.

"We'll be dealing with a number of issues never addressed before in the context of Holocaust education," says Pnina Zilberman, Director of Toronto's Holocaust Education and Memorial Centre.

They include Neo-Nazis and Hate Mail on the Internet, a workshop on the proliferation of Internet hate propaganda and Mengele Medicus: Medicine's Continuing Nazi Heritage, a comparison between Nazi medical experimentation and current issues of medical ethics. This year, 13 of 40 programs will take place in local churches.

Doron Opher, co-chair of the Holocaust Education Week Committee, hopes to "sensitize future generations from all communities about the Holocaust's lessons. Although it happened 50 years ago, it's a very current issue," he explains.

Opening night will feature internationally recognized photographer Faye Schulman, speaking about her experiences as a resistance fighter during the Holocaust.

More than a decade of Holocaust education

Holocaust Education Week began 15 years ago when several children of survivors decided to educate the community about the horrors of the Holocaust and the need to prevent a similar atrocity.

Eleanor Getzler, who was part of the group, remembers "realizing the time had come to educate the public."

"An important book about children of the Holocaust had just been published and we saw ourselves in that book," explains Getzler, chairperson of the Holocaust Remembrance Committee.

Holocaust Education Week was born when Rabbi Mark Shapiro approached the second generation with the concept of a community education and outreach program.

Now it's the only community-wide event of its kind in North America which has grown from 7 programs in 1980 to over 40 today.

Community Matters

Closing Branson poses risk to community

North York Branson Hospital is fighting for its life and the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto is backing the beleaguered facility. The Federation considers Branson too important for the Jewish community to lose, because Branson serves so many Jewish patients.

The District Health Council has recommended a merger between Branson, founded in 1957, and York-Finch Hospital. Branson would then become an ambulatory care centre.

In this interview with Community Matters writer, Adi Waksman, Branson President Jack Gallop reveals his concerns about the hospital's possible closure.

Branson President, Jack Gallop

Q: What is the importance of Branson to the Jewish community?

A: For 38 years the community has grown up around the hospital and the hospital grew with the community. Many Jewish residents moved into the area and recently a lot of Jews from Russia and other countries have moved into the area. According to our indicators, probably more older Jewish people come to Branson Hospital than to Mount Sinai.

Approximately 30% of our patients are Jewish and the majority of our medical staff is Jewish. We just started building a new chapel dedicated to them and this ties the hospital into the community in a very meaningful way. We provide kosher meals and we're looking at bringing kosher items into our vending machines.

Q: What steps are you taking in your fight to save Branson?

A: We have met with many of the Jewish leaders in the community such as the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto, B'nai Brith and Canadian Jewish Congress to outline the issues as we perceive them and the potential impact on the Jewish community. We've also talked with local community groups and politicians.

"...more older Jewish people come to Branson Hospital than to Mount Sinai"

Q: What is the impact going to be?

A: The biggest problem as we see it, is the loss of emergency and acute care facilities to this community, which is probably among the most elderly of any service area of any hospital in the city. Approximately 26,000 people are over age 65 and in the next 15 years that's expected to increase to about 38,000. Those people often are admitted through emergency and we're concerned that if the hospital is removed from this area, then emergency facilities will go too. We don't want these people to be stuck in traffic during rush hour trying to get to a hospital. We treat 400 heart attack victims a year here. So many elderly in the Jewish community are well into their 70s and 80s and beyond and getting to care is a big problem for them. It is also difficult for spouses and other family members to visit. If the hospital is located at Finch and 400, these elderly people will have to travel very far. When you're 70 or 80, having to take a long bus ride to an unfamiliar area, especially in the winter, can get very difficult. There are also many people who will not drive on Sabbath and it means they're not going to walk from Bathurst and Finch over to the 400. So they will not visit the ones they love.

Q: Why would an ambulatory care hospital not be just as useful?

A: Ambulatory care is basically for people who come to the hospital for day treatment; for tests, examinations and some day surgery but no emergency services. The aging population needs ambulatory services but they also need in-patient care. We already have devoted much of our space to ambulatory care, but it can't be exclusively ambulatory care. We think this site can provide both.

Q: How will you be working with the Jewish community to save Branson?

A: We sincerely believe the community needs the hospital but the community has to decide whether it shares that opinion. And it appears it does. Surveys we had done before the report came out indicate that people don't go west for care, they go south into the city or they go east or north. Even if they build a $50 million structure at York-Finch, people will not go there in the numbers predicted by the report.

"We don't want these people to be stuck in traffic during rush hour trying to get to a hospital"

Q: Were you surprised by the recommendation?

A: We were shocked. We could not believe that considering the present and forecasted needs of the community, the committee would recommend the closure of the hospital.

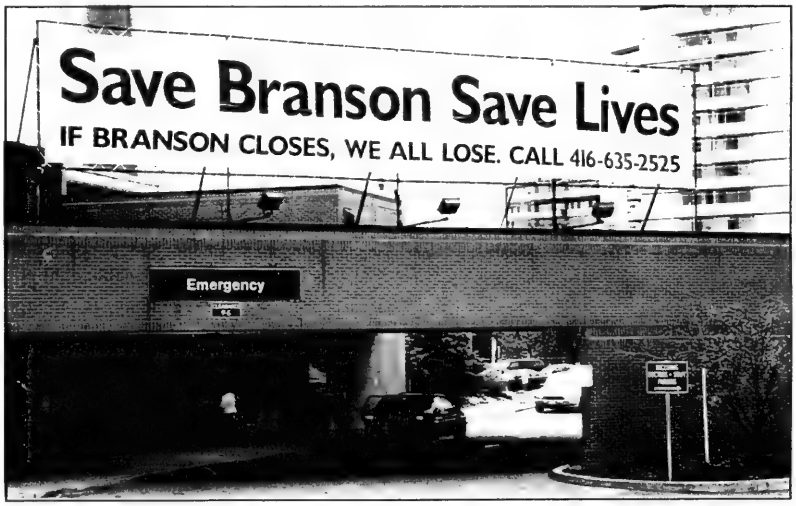
Q: Is there any validity to the argument that Branson is duplicating services?

A: The committee did not fully recognize the travel patterns of this community and the psychological barrier people have to travelling west. The York-Finch community and Branson community are very different.

There is some duplication because every community hospital is expected to provide that extra level of care. The question is whether that duplication is redundant. While we may do some of the same types of surgery for example, if this community needs access to emergency care, and we believe that it does, it naturally follows that it also needs in-patient support for emergency services.

Q: How are Branson's Jewish patients reacting to the report's recommendation?

A: The patients are very concerned and when doctors inform their patients, many of them are in tears. If this community needs this hospital then the community needs to makes its voice heard. It's more than simple inconvenience if this hospital goes. There's a real risk.



Branson Hospital is mobilizing the community in its battle for survival.

Federation Agency revitalizes Jewish life on campus

◄ Jewish Students from the University of Toronto, York, Ryerson and Seneca, on their way to a Jays game.

▲ Constructing campus history. For the first time ever, Jewish students at Ryerson and Seneca build a sukkah.

There's more life to Jewish life these days on university and community college campuses, thanks to the Federation's Jewish Campus Services (JCS).

"We're offering everything from serious Jewish studies to just hanging out," explains JCS director Zac Kaye, who oversees the umbrella organization which works with campus groups on Jewish programs. "Students are beginning to recognize the Federation's commitment to them and they're responding to our requests for continuous sharing and interaction," says Kaye. "We have a group of tremendously dynamic and energetic individuals working to engage young people between 18-24 years of age."

During orientation week at York University, the Jewish Student Federation (JSF) distributed cards listing different interests for students to check off. Social action, the environment and coalition building were popular choices.

Since September, 800 Jewish students have signed on to the JSF's mailing list. The JSF recently sponsored one of the most successful events ever, a Bosnia-aid dance, attended by 900 students, which raised $5,000 for victims of the war in the former Yugoslavia.

However, according to JSF Director Pearl Gropper, "the greatest challenge remains getting the message out."

Joanne Levitt hangs out at York's Central Square and uses a hands-on approach to reach what she calls "the unaffiliated."

"Some students, especially those in residence can end up feeling isolated," says Levitt. "I'm here, as Director of Engagement, to help them make the Jewish connection any way I can."

Sidura Ludwig, who is in charge of York Jewish students in residence, finds that most programs are targeted to commuting students and more needs to be done for those who are living on campus. "Shabbat dinners, Chanukah parties and movie nights help make resident students feel more a part of the community," says Ludwig.

At the University of Toronto, reports Jewish Students Union Director Lance Davis, "we're trying to engage students at their own level with no expectations."

The JSU recently held a Champagne and Chocolate Social that lasted until 1a.m. in the Shaarei Shomayim sukkah, at which, according to Davis, "all types of students showed up and had a really great time."

Approximately 12,000 Jewish students are enrolled in Greater Toronto Area post-secondary schools. While the majority attend U of T or York, Jewish activity on other campuses is also growing.

Tammy Sitcoff, Program Director for Jewish Campus Services at Ryerson Polytechnic University and Seneca College, thinks the campus is "a great place for young people to discover their Jewish identity." This year, for the first time, sukkahs were built at the Seneca and Ryerson campuses. "We wanted to be more visible," says Sitcoff. "People are really coming out of the woodwork everyday and I've even had calls from Humber College and George Brown about starting similar programs."

Yiddish revival led by the young

In the high-tech 90's, dominated by computers with science fiction functions, many Jewish young people are rediscovering the language of another century. They're learning that Yiddish can enrich their lives and act as an important link to their past.

Kindergarten, elementary school, high school, university, and adult Yiddish classes are being offered throughout the Greater Toronto Area, with the help of the Federation's Committee for Yiddish.

University of Toronto Yiddish instructor Ellie Kellman says "after years of emphasizing Hebrew, young people are realizing that Yiddish is just as important, culturally and historically." Most of Kellman's advanced students are in their mid-20's and see Yiddish as a tool for discovering their roots.

"It really can be a great vehicle of continuity from generation to generation," observes Ellie Moidel, who has been teaching Yiddish for the North York Board of Education for 3 years. More than half of Moidel's intermediate students last year were young adults, some of whom continued their Yiddish studies at McGill, Oxford and Columbia University.

Yiddish student Reena Katz

One of them is 19 year old Reena Katz. She started learning Yiddish at 16 and has taken courses at both the University of Toronto and Columbia.

"My great aunts started teaching me the language so that I could learn more about my family history," explains Katz. "There's a large pool of history, especially about the Jewish women's labour movement, that will be more accessible to me now that I know the language."

Suzanne Socken took an introductory level course at U of T last year because she wanted to learn her mother's first tongue. "Yiddish is a unique language," says Socken, who hopes to continue her Yiddish language studies in the future.

Literature and cultural programs are also being offered through organizations such as Friends of Yiddish and The Kultur-Gezelshaft.

For more information about Yiddish programs contact the Committee for Yiddish at the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto, (416) 635-2883 ext. 155.

Rabbi with a cause: so no Jew is forgotten

By Adi Waksman

Just another day for the handful of Jewish patients at the Queen Street Mental Health Centre. Some are talkative. Some are sullen and most seem unaware of their surroundings. All can expect a weekly visit from Rabbi Ronald Weiss, the Director of Chaplaincy Services, a UJA/Federation funded program run by Jewish Family & Child Service.

Using photocopied pages of Yom Kippur prayers, Weiss talked to his small audience about the importance of "having a clean slate" and "a fresh start".

After the service and a modest kiddush, Weiss proceeds to make his rounds and wish those patients he can reach, a happy new year. He leaves a note for one elderly man who refuses to open the door. "I'm not this man's favorite person," confides a good natured, undeterred Rabbi Weiss. "But I still have to try."

"It's not always easy to communicate with some of the patients but I try to connect in some way, even just by touching their shoulders gently."

From the friendly greeting one sick woman gave him as she ate lunch, Weiss is finally getting through. "He's my friend," she says, as the rabbi shook her hand and wished her Shana Tova and Refuah Shlema (full recovery).

"I give spiritual direction only when requested and I look for clues about what they need. Everybody has a soul so I try not to be judgemental and I just do the best I can."

For Rabbi Weiss, doing the best he can far exceeds what others are willing to do.

Ronald Weiss is not your typical rabbi. You won't find him leading a congregation and most of his inspirational sermons are delivered from somewhere other than a pulpit. They're delivered from the heart.

His mission is to provide spiritual guidance and outreach to people who, for one reason or another, feel alienated, abandoned and isolated from the rest of the Jewish community.

These people include hospital patients, the mentally and terminally ill, the elderly, and others who have had more than their fair share of bad luck and misfortune.

"Demand is growing every day for our services and as social upheaval continues, more people will seek the help of spiritual, social and psychological counsel," predicts Weiss.

The rabbi's responsibilities include much more than the usual rabbinical functions such as officiating at circumcisions, wedding ceremonies and funerals. He's also responsible for difficult questions of religious law and ensuring volunteer visits to Jewish people at 33 hospitals, 20 prisons and 45 nursing homes across the province.

Yet, Rabbi Weiss takes a typically modest view of his work. "I try to provide detached persons with some kind of link to Jewish life and the community," he says. It's the kind of understatement that overstates Rabbi Weiss' value to the Jewish community.

Refugees' conditions explored

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Rabbi Gunther Plaut's latest book, Asylum, is an exploration of moral issues concerning refugees.

The senior scholar and former rabbi of Holy Blossom Temple, a recognized expert on refugee matters, reminded some 60 people at his recent book launch at Holy Blossom that he himself came to the United States as a refugee from Nazi Germany 60 years ago.

His expertise was sought by the federal government in 1984 when he was asked to do a study on the subject, he said.

"I identified with the refugees when I recommended the amalgamation of the Immigration Board and the refugee advisory committee."

Rabbi Plaut's report became the blueprint for the Immigration and Refugee Board, which was created by the Conservative government in 1985.

According to Rabbi Plaut, refugees bring two rights into opposition: the right of a nation to determine its welfare and the right of the individual. "The dilemma of the conflict is that there is no single answer," he said.

The mood of the country has changed since he finished writing the book a year and a half ago, he added. "The rejectionist temper was not as hard."

Other speakers were Susan Davis, national director of Jewish Immigrant Aid Services, and York University professors Howard Adelman and David Dewitt.

"Refugees are a characteristic of modernity," said Adelman, founder and former director of the Centre for Refugees Studies. "There is no more empty space. The world has been divided up."

Western nations must do something about the genocides and the flow of refugees he said. "We are obliged to help. It's in our tradition ... We seek moral principles as the basis of our actions."

A major dilemma for Canadians, Davis said, is "How generous can we afford to be?" She praised Canada for having one of the most generous refugee acceptance policies in the world: 50 to 60 per cent of all claimants are allowed to stay.

"We have erred on the side of fairness" and that has allowed for some "peculiar problems," she said.

Davis stressed the need for the Jewish community to assist refugees. Quoting Rabbi Plaut, she said, "The way in which Jews treat the stranger is one of the most often repeated themes in the Torah because we were strangers. Tikkun Olam refers to the whole world."

Asylum was published by the Centre for Refugees Studies at York University and jointly funded by the centre and Holy Blossom. Proceeds from the book will be matched by Holy Blossom and go towards a yearly scholarship for an undergraduate in refugees studies at York University.

Physician turns political activist

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

Dr. Sheldon Hershkop

TORONTO — Sheldon Hershkop — bearded and bespectacled, with a speaking manner reflecting an intelligent mind and a habit of weighing his words — has recently taken on the unaccustomed role of political activist, to the point of being a speaker at rallies.

The 35-year-old physician is one of about a dozen people who constitute Jewish Action Coalition (JAC), a fledgling grassroots organization which co-sponsored three recent vigils in front of Toronto's Israeli Consulate to protest the Israeli government's handling of the peace process.

An outgrowth of Women in Green, the right-wing Israeli group whose Canadian arm is known as Canadian Friends of the Women for Israel's Tomorrow, JAC is preparing for its one-week solidarity mission to Israel from Nov. 8 to 15.

About 50 Toronto participants, to be joined by some 200 Americans, will be billeted with Jewish settler families for both budgetary and solidarity reasons. The cost of the trip, which will include a Jerusalem solidarity march on Nov 13, is $850 return airfare from Toronto.

The march will have a contingent leaving from New York; groups from England, South Africa and Australia have also been invited to attend.

What impelled Hershkop to become involved in JAC, despite his ambivalence about public protest, is his belief in the extreme danger posed to Jews in Israel by recent developments in the Middle East peace process. He also wants to express solidarity with and stand in place of Israeli protesters, some of whom have been beaten by Israeli police.

The day the Oslo 1 accord was signed in 1993, Hershkop, a religious Jew, fasted in mourning for what he perceived as a serious threat to Israel's security.

By the time Oslo 2 was signed this September, he felt compelled to express his concerns publicly.

"I would like nothing more than to be shown to be wrong, but in case I'm proven right, it's incumbent on us to get involved."

Hershkop isn't alone. At one weekend rally, about 100 people showed up. A large percentage were Orthodox Jews, as is the mainstay of JAC, but members insist that's just coincidental and that they welcome supporters from all segments of the community.

Although JAC members are "basically against land for peace," Hershkop said that if he sees Arabs and Jews living together peacefully in Israel, he would be "willing to discuss many things."

Members take no comfort from the apparent economic benefits of the peace process. "Having a prosperous country does not guarantee security. I think it's a brilliant PR ploy to deflect our concerns," said Hershkop.

"If peace is working, why do they have to shut down the territories to avoid terrorist attacks?" asked Anne Walker, founder of Canadian Friends of the Women for Israel's Tomorrow and a former "major dove." Walker joined Hershkop and fellow JAC member George Meister to meet with The CJN.

Although the number of terrorist incidents in Israel has decreased in the past year, the number of Israelis killed by terrorists has risen.

While left-wingers are heartened by the decreased number of incidents, Meister sees it as an ominous sign. "[The terrorists] are becoming more effective," he said tersely.

Meister is convinced that Jews must become more educated about the peace process and its implications.

He has approached Peace Now about participating in a large-scale "town hall" debate, even at the risk of losing some JAC supporters who might be swayed to the left.

He believes that most people fall into what he calls the "paralyzed ambivalent" category rather than right or left wing. "Many people find it ... easier not to deal with it. Our responsibility is to raise the consciousness of the Jewish community."

Seniors' health discussed

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Some language functions and some narrative abilities improve in old age, a psychiatrist told a recent public health forum sponsored by the Baycrest Centre Women's Auxiliary.

Although in general elderly people learn well, their thinking processes slow down, there may be difficulty in retrieving information and there is some decreased ability to remember names, said Dr. David Conn, Baycrest head of psychiatry.

Memories of depressed patients improve once the depression is treated, Conn said, adding that many family doctors treat depression in the aged very well.

On a lighter note, he told the story of a man who visited his doctor to complain about his wife's terrible memory. "What's wrong with her memory?" the doctor asked. "She never forgets a thing," the man replied.

The forum also launched a new book by Baycrest staffer Evelyne Michaels, Look to This Day, a Complete Guide to Health and Well-Being in Your Later Years, published by Key Porter Books.

Michaels' preface deals with her Russian-born grandmother, Sarah Cantor, who lived to age 97, never suffered a major illness until she had her gall bladder removed at age 70 and died months after falling from a hospital bed and fracturing her hip. Her grandmother, Michaels said, had good luck and good longevity genes, escaping infection before the advent of antibiotics.

The author dedicated Look to This Day to her mother, Edith Michaels of Montreal, who attended the forum. "I hope I age as gracefully as she has," she said.

Baycrest's recent installation of a privacy room is in recognition of the fact that sexual urges do not disappear with age, said Dr. Michael Gordon, vice-president of medical services.

Studies have shown that a large majority of elderly people want to live alone, but close to their families, said Dr. Margaret MacAdam, social services' vice-president.

End-of-life decisions are looming as the next main problem for families, she said, citing as an example whether to keep a patient on tube feeding. Another troublesome area, she said, is when older parents decide to remarry or move in with someone. "Adult children then worry about estates, but they should recognize that people are lonely and relationships are important."

Eat more fruits and vegetables, particularly those of a dark color, more grains and cereals, and drink eight to 10 glases of fluid a day, was the advice of dietitian Carol Robertson.

Also taking part were Gilda Goodman, Harriet Bomza and Florence Minz Geneen, Baycrest chair.

Computer maven tackles racists on the Internet

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — If it were up to Ken McVay, federal authorities would scrap their proposal to criminalize the flow of hate propaganda on computer networks.

Not that McVay has any sympathy for the purveyors of hate-inciting material on the Internet.

On the contrary, McVay has spent the better part of the past four years actively opposing hatemongers' racist lies.

In the early years, he surfed the Net and confronted Holocaust-deniers mano-a-mano, arguing with them and refuting their lies.

From his Vancouver Island headquarters (he doesn't want to get more specific than that), he established the Nizkor Project, dedicated to the memory of Hitler's victims, with the mandate to fight hate propaganda on the Internet by disseminating truthful information.

He's spent untold hours entering data on his computer, developing carpal tunnel syndrome in the process, but giving curious computer users access to legitimate research on topics often raised by Holocaust-deniers and other racists. PhD candidates, anti-racist organizations and just plain computer enthusiasts have all accessed information provided by McVay.

The best way to discredit the purveyors of hate is to counter their lies with facts, he said.

"These guys are lying through their teeth," said McVay. "You don't have to be Jewish to be offended by them. It's best to let the idiots on the Net to make fools of themselves in front of thousands of people.

"We don't want them to go away," he continued. "We want to give them a hard time and expose them as idiots."

McVay, who was in Toronto as part of a five-week cross-country tour organized by B'nai Brith, believes that "if you try to enact a law, you make them martyrs and people say, 'What are the Jews afraid of?' "

Massive quantities of information will work best to counter hatemongers' lies. To that end, he has expanded a modest computer enterprise that at one time provided users with 3,000 files a month through electronic mail to the point where it now delivers close to 40,000 monthly "hits" on the World Wide Web.

Switching to layman's language, McVay explained that as of April 20, not coincidentally Hitler's birthday, the Nizkor Project became available to computer lurkers everywhere, and that information is being accessed from Nizkor's files 40,000 times a month.

Finding and entering all the anti-racist information available in computer databanks is a herculean task, and McVay has come to rely on more than 100 volunteers who provide him with information and who "look after the technical side of the Web."

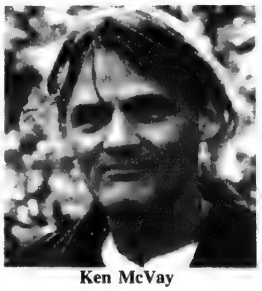
One of them, Jamie McCarthy of Kalamazoo, Mich., met McVay for the first time during his Toronto visit. McCarthy, who has started his own computer consulting business, was browsing the Net several years ago when he stumbled across material that offended him.

The material purported to quote the New York Times, but when McCarthy went to the library to check it out, he found the references were invented.

McVay has also established linkages to anti-racist organizations like B'nai Brith, the Simon Wiesenthal Centre in Los Angeles and a Toronto group called Artists Against Racism.

"There are a lot of people doing this. They're interested in dealing with historical realities," he said.

His dedicating himself to opposing hate has been recognized in his home province, which recently honored him with the Order of British Columbia.



Ken McVay

Running the Nizkor Project has become a full-time job for McVay and he attributes his interest in opposing racists to his bloodlines. His ancestors took part in the Boston Tea Party and his grandfather "taught me to value truth and integrity."

An Oregon policeman in his early 20s, McVay recalls how he tried to get his own sheriff arrested for illegal activities, but instead found himself fired from the force.

A one-time construction welder, McVay also served as a union organizer on Vancouver Island.

McVay said he has "no big agenda" in opposing Holocaust-deniers and racists.

"They're offensive. It's as simple as that. They offended me so I try to do something about it."

McVay's address on the world wide web is: HTTP//WWW. ALMANAC.BC.CA; FTP: FTP. ALMANAC. BC.CA.

His e-mail address is: KMCVAY@NIZKOR. ALMANAC.BC.CA or JAMIE @ NIZKOR. ALMANAC.BC.CA

A market scene captured by the artist.

Yorkville gallery now hosting Fifty Years in Kensington Market

By CYNTHIA GASNER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Renowned artist and teacher Aba Bayefsky has captured the evolving scenes of the market that once was the heart of the Jewish community.

More than 30 of Bayefsky's drawings and paintings of Kensington Market, past and present, are on display to Nov. 14 at the Mitchell Gallery, in an exhibition titled Fifty Years in Kensington Market.

Bayefsky's lifelong fascination with Kensington Market began when he was in his teens and he sketched the area as a student under Arthur Lismer at the Grange Art Centre for children with special talent.

Now, more than 50 years later, he says that period "was the most exciting time of my life — my future was cast." He told The CJN he has never stopped following his destiny as an artist "and I never looked back."

For half a century, Bayefsky's ongoing work has captured the changing scenes of Kensington. He says that although his works were not intended to be a historical document, "they have become one." He estimates that he has done some 700 drawings and paintings of the market.

Describing the neighborhood as a "halfway house" for immigrants, where friendships were formed, protection was provided by people from the homeland and integration into the larger community was possible, Bayefsky says Kensington was "a bridge between their former life and their introduction to Canada."

His realistic interpretations capture the spirit of one of Toronto's most famous areas. He still visits the market three times a week before his dialysis treatments at Toronto Western Hospital, wandering through the market sketching the people and the architecture.

Many of the scenes of the past are disappearing, but Bayefsky takes us back to an era when Spadina Avenue was the main source of employment for newcomers who worked in the needle trade and College Street was a strolling and meeting place. Scenes of the shochet, the fruit seller, the fish monger and other shopkeepers and shoppers clearly recall the past.

Born in Toronto, Bayefsky attended Central Technical School and the Academy Julian Paris. He served in the Royal Canadian Air Force and was an official war artist. He completed a series of drawings and paintings of Bergen-Belsen in 1945.

He has had many one-man shows and exhibited around the world, and he is represented in permanent collections in major galleries. He has received numerous awards for his works which encompass many themes.

His mural honoring the Israeli athletes who were murdered at the 1972 Olympics in Munich is in the lobby of the Jewish Community Centre on Spadina Avenue.

His portfolio of lithographs titled Tales of the Talmud was presented to Menachem Begin by former prime minister Pierre Trudeau on behalf of the Canadian people, to commemorate the Israeli prime minister's visit to Canada in 1978.

When then president Tito of Yugoslavia visited Canada, he was presented with Bayefsky's portfolio Faces of Earth and Sky.

The artist has also captured Native Indian legends in his exhibition, Legends, and he did a series of painting of Hebrew New Year prayers, Avinu Malkenu.

The Mitchell Gallery is located at 112 Scollard St., in the Yorkville area.

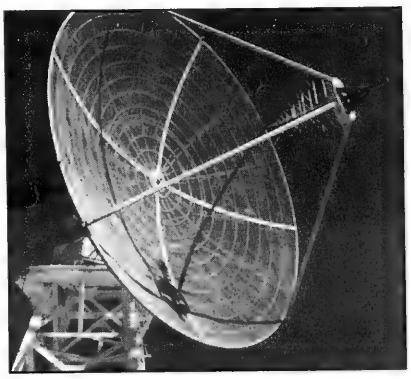
A $15 Billion Dream Came True...

One Investor At A Time.

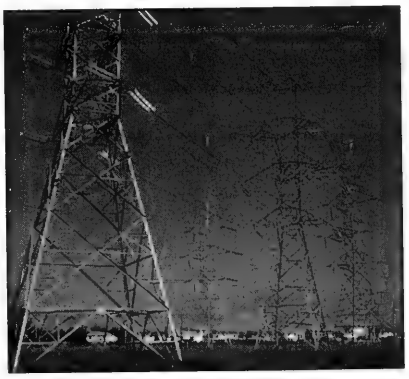
Over the past 45 years, State of Israel Bonds has played a pivotal role in the success of Israel. And so have you. Over $15 billion of productive investment capital has been created through the firsthand participation of Israel's modern shareholder, Canadian Jews just like you. It is your commitment and emotional bond with the Holy Land that has allowed Israel to survive and prosper. And yet, even though Israel is a success beyond the dreams of its founders, some Jews still ask "...why does Israel still need my investment?"

Well here's the simple truth. Time does not stand still. While thoughts of the Holy Land may evoke images of deserts and seas from biblical times, thousands of years ago, the success that is Israel today is the very image of a modern and vibrant world. A world economy rapidly expanding and a people building our future. Like any growing company, Israel's industrial expansion requires a steady and reliable source of investment to develop communications, energy and transportation - the lifeblood of a booming economy.

Every Jewish man, woman and child must experience the emotional bond of their truly unique partnership with Israel.



Telecommunications Bezeq, the state owned telecommunications corporation will invest a total of $2.94 billion in the next four years.



Hydro Electric Power The Israel Electric Corporation will double its electric capacity in the next eight years at a cost of $1 billion a year.

Trans Israel Highway The first $800 million stage will boost regional development projects, including new cities along its route.

The miracles of the past are clearly described in history books. But the miracles made possible by Jews around the world are monumental achievements taking place every day in Israel.

In 1994, Israel's economy grew at a rate of 6.8% which is faster than all of the OECD countries which averaged only 3.1%.

Israel's 1995 budget is $49 billion including a bold new $7.1 billion infrastructure program.

This is how Israel Bond investments are working. For Israel. For Jews everywhere. For you.

Yalden emphatic on hatemongers

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Max Yalden makes a statement rare for any public official: "I have no problem with going on the record about this," says the emphatic chief commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. "Hate propaganda is not free speech. It is incitement. When you say the Holocaust did not happen, that six million Jews did not die, that's not historical debate. It's incitement to hatred."

Banning hate propaganda, he says, is not about freedom of speech. It's about common sense and respect for others.

But at the same time, Yalden is not so sanguine about the newest methods of disseminating hate. Telephone hate lines, some of which the commission has successfully shut down in the past, will never go away completely. "More keep cropping up," he concedes.

As for the Internet, with its freewheeling, global access, Yalden is confident that ways will be found to clamp down. Ottawa is now considering making it an offence to import or export hate propaganda via computer networks.

Max Yalden

In town recently to address the annual meeting of the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews, Yalden throws his hands up when asked whether there's confusion on the public's part as to the difference between the Canadian Human Rights Commission and its 10 provincial counterparts. It's obviously a question he's asked often.

The federal commission, he told The CJN in an interview, is for human rights complaints against any federally regulated body, be it a bank, Crown corporation the armed forces, post office or any telecommunications outfit.

Now in its 17th year, the commission, set up a year after the Human Rights Act became law, fields hundreds of grievances annually, ranging from sexual harassment and discrimination (the single biggest category, Yalden notes, with 373 complaints last year), discrimination based on disabilities in roughly second place, followed by complaints of unfair treatment based on race and age.

In February, a commission tribunal will hear a complaint from Mike Wychara, a Jewish letter carrier for Canada Post who claimed he was denied vacation time or unpaid leave to observe religious holidays.

While Yalden notes that the commission "is an alternative to the courts," it has no power of its own to impose penalties. But court actions have been taken, based on commission findings. In 1993, a court ordered the neo-Nazi Heritage Front's telephone hate line in Toronto shut down, after the group ignored a commission injunction to cease and desist. And last year, Heritage Front members were jailed and fined for again ignoring an injunction from the commission.

Despite the undeniable advances on the human rights front since World War II — most notably the progress of women in traditionally male-dominated jobs — Yalden believes we're still not out of the woods. Problems like time off to observe religious holidays or what he calls "an undercurrent of intolerance" for immigration policies persist, while new ones, like religious headgear in Canadian Legion halls, crop up.

Yalden, a former commissioner of official languages, would like to see the federal Liberals keep their election promise to strengthen both the Human Rights Act and employment equity laws.

But the "most pressing" human rights concern before Canadians, he says, is the plight of aboriginal people.

Newfoundland university honors two survivors of the Holocaust

By JOEL JACOBSON
CJN Maritimes Corresondent

HALIFAX — It's a long way from a Polish shtetl to the stage of the auditorium at Memorial University of Newfoundland.

And 50 years ago, receiving an honorary degree from a Canadian university was farthest from the minds of two persecuted Jews from a war-torn but liberated Europe.

Recently, Moishe Kantorowitz and Grunia Ferman were conferred honorary degrees to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the end of World War II and, more importantly, the contribution each had made to Newfoundland and to Canada.

"They are special people who deserve to be honored," said Ern Condon, a guidance counsellor at J. R. Smallwood Collegiate in Wabush, Western Labrador. Condon, who nominated Kantorowitz and Ferman, was friends with Grunia Ferman and her late husband Lewis for many years, watching the two immigrants reshape their lives after their arrival in Newfoundland in 1947.

"They were very caring people," said Condon. "Lewis had muiltiple languages and volunteered to translate for Russian and Polish sailors when they needed medical, legal and political assistance."

Grunia Ferman, who now lives in Toronto, said humbly that it will be a "happy and a sad time. I feel my husband deserves this more than I."

Yet she also participated in humanitarian work, helping Lewis tend the sick and injured seamen.

"Lewis was the first in Canada to organize a memorial to the Warsaw Ghetto uprising," said Ferman, who, with her husband, survived the war as Polish partisans and underground fighters.

"Every April he brought together clergy, students, university professors, even [former member of parliament] John Crosby and [former Newfoundland premier] Joey Smallwood, to speak at these memorials."

Kantorowitz spent more than two years in Auschwitz, Mathausen and Gussin before being liberated in 1945. He is the sole survivor of his family, having lost 51 relatives, as well as friends and neighbors.

Arriving in Canada in 1948, he came to Newfoundland in 1956 and established a drygoods business.

"I find this overwhelming," he said recently from Toronto, where he moved in 1989. "I'm just an ordinary fellow who tries to do his best to promote racial acceptance."

His best included 33 years of speech after speech to Newfoundland school and community groups about the Holocaust.

"The last words my mother said to me were, 'Should you survive, make your way to the United States and tell my brothers how we suffered and what we went through.' My mother's inspiration made me survive. I saw my uncles, told them the story and have told it thousands of times since."

He said memories constantly flood back. "The night of a speech at a school I don't feel so great. But it is a mission in life for me."

He's also written 800 pages, in Yiddish, of his memoirs, a story his children tell him should be translated to English and printed.

During the convocation weekend, a Holocaust education seminar was held in St. John's co-sponsored by B'nai Brith of Canada and the Newfoundland and Labrador Human Rights Association. Ferman and Kantorowitz spoke at the seminar, as did Rochelle Wilner, national education chair for B'nai Brith Canada.

Hamilton temple to hold scholar-in-residence weekend

By MOURA WOLPERT
Special to The CJN

HAMILTON — Temple Anshe Sholom will hold its first-ever Scholar-in-Residence Weekend Nov. 10 to 12.

Prof. Judith Baskin, chair of the Department of Judaic Studies, State University of New York at Albany, will be the scholar-in-residence for the weekend, which will address the theme, The Modern Jewish Family: Where Have We Been, Where Are We Going?

A tribute dinner will honor Alice Sorger, an active member of Temple Anshe Sholom and founder of its social action group, TASSAG.

Prof. Judith Baskin

Baskin is the eldest of the three children of the temple's rabbi emeritus Bernard Baskin and his wife Marjorie.

Raised in Hamilton, Baskin received her PhD in Medieval studies from Yale University in 1976. She is the editor of Women of the Word: Jewish Women and Jewish Writing and the author of Pharaoh's Counsellors: Job, Jethro and Balaam in Rabbinic and Patristic Tradition, a book comparing Jewish and Christian views in late antiquity.

At the tribute dinner, Baskin will speak on Women's Contribution to the Jewish Community, Past and Present. Following the dinner, there will be a study and discussion session on Jewish Family Values in Traditional Jewish Texts.

On Nov. 10, Baskin will speak on Challenges Facing The Modern Jewish Family: What Can We Learn From the Past? The weekend will conclude with a lecture and discussion on Defining Jewish Identity in a Hostile World, based on definitions of Jewish identity and family values in the autobiographies of Jews of early modern Europe, Glueckel of Hameln and Solomon Maimon.

The weekend is being organized by Rabbi Irwin Zeplowitz, who initiated what it is hoped will become an annual event, with Dr. Ronnie Miller, Temple Anshe Sholom director of education, and Dr. Anthony Macfarlane, first vice-president.

The members of Jerusalem Branch 26, Farband Labour Zionist Alliance, mourn the passing of our member Morris "Lefty" Kates ז"ל on August 19. Our sympathy to his wife Fay and Family. He was a dedicated member; Vice-President and Social Chairman.

Rabbi brings holistic approach to shul

Special to The CJN

Rabbi Larry Lander

LONDON — Rabbi Larry Lander is settling into his new position as rabbi of Or Shalom Synagogue.

Born and raised in Calgary, Rabbi Lander was formerly assistant rabbi at Rosh Pinah Synagogue in Winnipeg. For the past seven years, he has been rabbi and educator at Har Tikvah Congregation in Brampton, Ont., and the Jewish chaplain at Whitby Psychiatric Hospital. He holds a Masters degree in Social Work, with special training in marital counselling.

Rabbi Lander believes he brings a holistic approach to Judaism. His vision for Or Shalom is that it should be a place where people of all generations come together to celebrate, work and learn in a congregational family environment.

He says he looks forward to working in cooperation with the other rabbis in the community, is a willing advocate for Jewish concerns with educational, municipal and other groups, and is eager to help facilitate public education.

Recently, the congregation officially welcomed him and his wife Susan. Rabbi Neal Rose, a professor at the University of Manitoba, installed Rabbi Lander at Shabbat services.

Palestinian envoy steals show

By MYRON LOVE
CJN Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG — The Winnipeg chapter of the Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University's (CFHU) recent second annual symposium on the peace process in the Middle East was an historic occasion, for it marked the first time in Canada that representatives of Israel, Egypt and the Palestinian National Authority sat together on one panel.

It was all in an atmosphere of friendship and cooperation — and the new Palestinian envoy to Canada, Baker Abdel Munem, stole the show.

Following the panel, each participant was presented with a cap bearing the logo of the Winnipeg Goldeyes baseball club. As a token of friendship and in a gesture that was well-received, Munem walked to the audience and gave his cap to Ike Chamish for one of his grandchildren in Israel.

Chamish had earlier asked what guarantees the Palestinians could offer for his grandchildren's future.

Munem arrived in Canada as the official representative of the Palestinian Authority (PA) in August, after having represented the PLO in Japan for 12 years. An author and academic with three PhDs, he has been a member of the Palestinian National Council since 1993.

In his presentation, Munem drew an imaginary picture, with those Palestinians in support of the peace process on one side in a white area, those opposed in black on the other side, and shades of gray in the middle. As facts on the ground change, he noted, the waves in the picture push more people to either support or oppose the peace process.

Dr. Eli Yerushalmi, Israel's acting ambassador to Canada, outlined highlights in the peace process that led to the most recent agreement, signed in Washington last month, on Sept. 28, going back to the disengagement in the City of Suez immediately after the 1973 Yom Kippur War.

"For us, this is a moral rather than a political decision," he said. "Israel is strong enough to take some short-term risks for long-term peace. We have freed ourselves from controlling the destiny of another people."

He cautioned, though, that extremist violence has to be stopped.

He described the Oslo accords as an "experiment" in peaceful coexistence, noting that in Gaza and Jericho, armed Israeli and Palestinian military and police forces jointly patrol roads and protect buses as well as yeshivah students in Jericho.

After Palestinians hold elections next May, he said, the negotiations will begin on the tough issues — repatriation of Palestinians, Jewish settlements on the West Bank, sharing of water resources, Palestinian relations with other Arab countries and the status of Jerusalem. "We hope to complete the process by 1999," Yerushalmi said.

Egypt's ambassador to Canada, Dr. Mahmoud Farghal, spoke of the strengthening of Egyptian-Israeli relations as a model for peace between Israel and other Arab countries. He emphasized the need for jobs and economic development for the Palestinians if the attraction of extremism is to be overcome and the peace process to succeed.

Egypt, he reported, is proposing the establishment of a regional bank to finance development projects in the Middle East.

He also spoke of Egypt's role as a stabilizing force in the region and its role as intermediary, not only between Israel and the Arabs, but also between Arab states.

Farghal called for more Arab/Muslim-Jewish dialogues such as the CFHU panel and reviewed the common values that unite Jews and Muslims.

Sault's Jews celebrate shul's 50th anniversary

By JEFF ARBUS
Special to The CJN

SAULT STE. MARIE — The Jewish community here recently celebrated the 50th anniversary of Congregation Beth Jacob.

About 50 former members of the community returned for the reunion. Under the leadership of Bryna Coppel, the organizers arranged various events including Shabbat services and an Oneg Shabbat.

After Havdalah, a dinner was held, with speakers representing four generations of the community. Recognition plaques were presented by Ron Irwin, MP, on behalf of the prime minister; Tony Martin, MPP, on behalf of the premier; and Sault Mayor Joe Fratesi.

Canadian author Morley Torgov reminisced about his boyhood years in Sault Ste. Marie and expressed the sentiments of the returning guests when he said how much this renunion meant to him. Student Katrina Holkko told of her pride in knowing that the actions of her grandfather, who helped to build the synagogue, meant that today she has a place to attend Hebrew school.

Others told tales of the earlier days of the community and the struggles which were faced as two congregations became one; letters of congratulation were received from those who could not attend; community members now deceased were fondly remembered.

The vitality of the current community was recognized by the speakers and all agreed that the Jewish community of Sault Ste. Marie has a bright future.

Jewish merchants began to settle in Sault Ste. Marie about 100 years ago. For many years, there were two congregations, which would hold services in homes or vacant space in the building of one of the merchants.

In 1945, the congregations merged and built the Beth Jacob Synagogue. The community had about 60 families at one time. Today there are about 35 families.

"This reunion has given us the confidence that the Jewish community in Sault Ste. Marie will be around to celebrate its 100th anniversary, said Bob Cohen, Beth Jacob president.

Nine Jews made their mark in the majors in '95

By NEIL KELLER
Special to The CJN

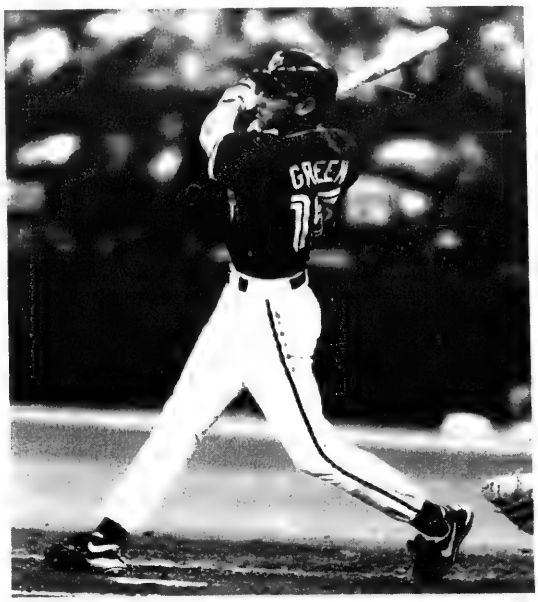
ROCKVILLE, Md. — Jewish athletes have been involved in baseball since it became a big-time sport in the 1800s. In fact, Lipman Pike, a Jewish player, is considered the first athlete ever to have been paid for his baseball ability.

The tradition continued in 1995, as nine Jewish players made appearances in the major leagues. Here is a review of how each player performed.

Shawn Green is perhaps the premier Jewish player in the majors. Not yet 23 years old, the right fielder appeared in 121 of 144 games this season for the Toronto Blue Jays.

In his first full season in the majors, Green had a .288 batting average and 31 doubles, four triples and 15 home runs. Due to his many extra base hits, he led the team with a .509 slugging average. Many analysts predict that Green could be a future superstar.

Another Jewish player who had an excellent year was Brad Ausmus of the San Diego Padres. The Padres catcher began the season with a sizzling .350 batting average. He simmered down through the year and finished at .293.



Shawn Green

Ausmus, 26, was very steady behind the plate and committed only six errors all season. He was also one of the leading catchers in terms of stolen bases, with 16.

The Cleveland Indians had their best year since 1954 when they were led by Jewish slugger, Al Rosen. The Tribe finished 30 games ahead of the second place Kansas City Royals and had the best record in the majors. Cleveland was also the only team in the majors with two Jewish players on their roster.

Jesse Levis and Ruben Amaro, Jr., performed for the Tribe this season. Both players were in the Indians' minor league system for most of the season but contributed whenever they were brought up.

Statistically, Levis had the highest average of the Jewish players. The catcher finished with a .333 batting average, but only appeared in 12 games. He had six hits in 18 at-bats.

Amaro played in 28 games for the Tribe. The outfielder had 12 hits in 60 at-bats — including one home run — for a batting average of exactly .200. The 30-year-old has spent most of his time in the minors but still shows the talent to rise in the majors.

It was a rough season for Jose Bautista and the entire San Francisco Giants team. The Giants finished in last place and the pitching staff often gave up a lot of runs.

Bautista won only three games out of 11 decisions this year, down compared to 1993, when he won 10 and lost only three. However, the Giants showed their confidence in Bautista, as he was second on the team in number of appearances with 52. His earned run average was 6.44.

Another Jewish catcher in the major leagues is Eric Helfand of the Oakland Athletics. He appeared in 38 games and had 14 hits in 86 at-bats.

Jose Bautista

Other part-timers included Brian Kowitz of the Atlanta Braves, who was brought up for a few games when star player David Justice was on injured reserve. Kowitz finished with a .167 batting average by getting four hits in 24 at-bats. The 26-year-old outfielder has performed very well in the minor leagues and should see more action in the majors next year.

Brian Bark has a lot in common with Kowitz besides sharing the same first name. Both players are from the Baltimore suburbs and played together in the Braves' minor league system. This year, Bark was traded to the Boston Red Sox and appeared in three games. He pitched a total of 2⅓ innings and gave up no earned runs. Statistically, Bark had the lowest ERA in the majors.

A few years ago, Eddie Zosky was considered one of the top shortstop rookies to enter the majors. Unfortunately, nagging arm injuries have kept the 27-year-old in the minors. This year, he had a very brief stint with the Florida Marlins. He had one hit in five at-bats for a .200 batting average.

U.S. Congress votes to move embassy to Jerusalem

CJN News Services

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Senate last Tuesday overwhelmingly approved, by a 93 to 5 vote, a bill to move the U.S. embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem by May 1999.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, who sponsored the legislation, called last Tuesday "an historic day for the U.S. Senate. Long discussed and long promised, [it] marks the day a U.S. embassy in Jerusalem will be a reality."

The House of Representatives passed an identical bill, sponsored by Speaker Newt Gingrich, by a 374 to 37 vote.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres welcomed the the congressional passage of the bill, saying, "If there is one issue Israel is united around, it is a united Jerusalem as the capital of Israel."

"We don't have the slightest doubt that not too far away in the future, most embassies will go to Jerusalem and Jerusalem will be recognized as it should be: the united capital of Israel," Peres said in a statement.

He noted that the "Jewish people have never had another capital but Jerusalem, and Jerusalem was never an Arab capital in the past. So this, I believe, is in compliance with history, geography and reason."

A senior U.S. administration official said President Bill Clinton has not yet decided whether to sign the bill. One option, officials say, is for the president to not sign the bill, thereby allowing it to become law automatically after 30 days.

That move would preserve the president's waiver authority while presumably not sending the message to the Palestinians that Clinton supports the move to relocate the embassy to Jerusalem.

Under the Dole bill, the president, beginning in October 1998, may suspend the embassy's move for six months if he informs Congress that doing so "is necessary to protect the national security interests of the U.S." There are no limits on how many waivers may be issued.

JERUSALEM — Last week's congressional passage of the bill to move the American embassy to Jerusalem is unlikely to have any immediate impact on the Israeli-Palestinian peace process.

Opponents of the legislation within the Clinton administration — and within the Israeli government — had warned during recent months that passage of the bill might trigger vigorous opposition within the Palestinian community and within the wider Arab world. They warned that it could throw the entire peace process into turmoil.

In all the Israeli-Palestinian negotiations, there is no hotter issue than the future of Jerusalem.

The issue is so delicate that the framers of the Declaration of Principles signed by Israel and the PLO in September 1993 postponed discussion of the future of the holy city until the final-status talks, slated to start in May 1996.

These trepidations fueled controversy around the bill, generating much heat within the American political arena, within the U.S. Jewish community and between the Israeli government and its friends in Washington.

But when the legislation overwhelmingly passed, there were no demonstrations by Palestinians. The Palestinian Authority did not publish a formal condemnation of the law, as had been expected.

But Faisal Husseini, the PLO's top official in Jerusalem, did speak out against the move, saying that it could harm Israeli-Arab peace efforts.

He told a television interviewer that the United States had promised the Palestinians it would not take any steps that could affect the final status of Jerusalem.

Ottawa's embassy to stay put

OTTAWA — Canada has no plans to move its embassy to Jerusalem from Tel Aviv, a spokesperson said last week.

The status of Jerusalem "can be resolved only as part of a general settlement of the Arab-Israeli dispute," Rodney Moore of the Foreign Affairs Department told The CJN.

Moore said Canada has regarded eastern Jerusalem as "occupied territory" ever since Israeli forces reunited the city in the 1967 Six Day war.

Moore said the U.S. Congress' decision last week to transfer its embassy to Jerusalem is "an internal matter for the United States."

IDF truck convoy heralds first phase of redeployment

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — The first phase of redeployment of Israel Defence Force troops began in Jenin last Wednesday, as a convoy of trucks evacuated equipment from the police station and a district coordination office opened for business.

Some stones were hurled, slightly injuring a border policeman, and three firebombs were thrown at the police station, but in general, there were few disturbances.

"The Palestinians understand there are many problems we need to sort out and that an orderly transfer of power is preferable to a hasty pullout," said the Jenin brigade commander, adding that bypass roads for Jewish settlers have been finished.

While the police station, a Jerusalem-stone structure surrounded by cypress and pine trees, was evacuated, the Palestinians will only begin using it when redeployment in the city is completed, no earlier than mid-November. In the meantime, it was transferred to the IDF.

Earlier in the morning, while equipment was being loaded on trucks, an IDF officer scanned the crowd waving Palestinian flags.

"It looks as if they have liberated Palestine, but nothing is changing for them," he said.

Announcing
THE BRONFMAN YOUTH FELLOWSHIPS IN ISRAEL 1996

For the tenth consecutive summer, a group of outstanding Jewish teenagers in the U.S. and Canada, coming from a wide variety of backgrounds and entering the twelfth grade of school, will be recipients of the Bronfman Youth Fellowships*. They will spend five fulfilling weeks of study, dialogue and travel in Israel.

The Bronfman Fellows will be selected on the basis of character, intellectual interests, special talents and leadership qualities. Merit, not financial need, is the program's selection standard. Fellowship activities begin on July 8, with a return from Israel on August 14. All meals will be kosher, and Sabbath activities will be in the spirit of the day.

Based in Jerusalem, the Fellows will engage in an intense interaction with a diverse rabbinic faculty and counselors, representing a wide range of Jewish perspectives. They will explore Jewish texts against the background of Israel's land, culture and customs ... take part, at a time of rapid change, in seminars with some of the country's leading political and cultural figures ... debate ideas and search for insights, on the different ways to define oneself as a Jew today, all in an atmosphere of mutual respect and open dialogue.

The purpose: to return home with a new understanding of the myriad issues facing the Jewish people and the Jewish state, and a new appreciation of the importance of Jewish unity.

War in Lebanon takes a heavy toll

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

Israel's ugly little war in southern Lebanon continues to take its toll.

Last month, nine Israeli soldiers fell in two separate incidents within four days. Not since August 1993 had so many Israeli troops fallen in so short a span. So far this year, 22 have died, compared to 21 in all of 1994.

MIDEAST ANALYSIS

Hezbollah, Israel's chief foe, has steadily escalated the conflict. From 160 attacks in 1993, the figure climbed to 200 in 1994 and has risen to more than 400 this year.

In its unremitting attempts to end Israel's military presence in the security zone, which Israel has controlled in conjunction with the South Lebanon Army for the past decade, Hezbollah has laid ambushes, fired mortars, rockets and missiles and planted roadside bombs.

And on occasion, Hezbollah has targeted Israeli settlements in the Galilee. In the last incident of its kind this past summer, Katyusha rockets rained down on a Club Med resort near Nahariya, killing a French chef.

"This is a war," declared Gen. Amnon Lipkin-Shahak, the Israeli chief of staff, in the wake of the latest flareups in mid-October.

In the first armed encounter, three Israeli soldiers were killed when a Hezbollah squad ambushed a convoy at close range, peppering it with anti-tank rockets and machine gun and automatic rifle fire. In the second, six Israeli troops died when their armored personnel carrier ventured off a road and hit a mine.

Although the casualties sting Israel, Israelis, for all practical purpoases, have become inured to the violence. They are cognizant of the fact that the Lebanese front, once so peaceful, has metamorphosed into Israel's "hottest" border.

Before the Six Day War in 1967, Israel's frontier with Lebanon was blessedly tranquil. By 1968, this was no longer true, as the PLO gained a foothold in Lebanon and began to infiltrate Israel's border.

The problem grew by leaps and bounds when, following the 1970-71 civil war in Jordan, the Arab Legion ousted the PLO from Jordanian territory. Rebounding from defeat, the PLO established a network of bases in Lebanon, from which it attacked Israel.

These assaults prompted Israel to launch a series of retaliatory raids, a mini-invasion in 1978 (Operation Litani) and a full-scale invasion in 1982. Israel did not achieve all its objectives, but did succeed in temporarily destroying the PLO's infrastructure.

By overstaying its welcome in Lebanon, Israel antagonized the largest religious sect in the country, the Shi'ites, who had previously regarded the PLO as their main enemy. The Shi'ites formed several militias, including Hezbollah, to defend their interests.

In 1983, when it was still unclear when or even whether Israel would withdraw from Lebanon, Hezbollah — an Islamic fundamentalist group — inaugurated what proved to be a successful guerrilla war against the Israeli army entrenched in southern Lebanon. Syria and Iran supported the onslaught.

The fighting did not stop with Israel's almost complete withdrawal in 1985. Since then, it has waxed and waned, triggering Israeli responses on land, at sea and in the air.

In July 1993, following a week of fierce artillery exchanges (Operation Accountability), Israel and Hezbollah reached an informal agreement mediated by the United States and Syria. Under the pact, Israel promised to refrain from hitting Lebanese civilians north of the security zone and, in return, Hezbollah pledged not to fire on the Galilee.

With several notable exceptions, the agreement has held. However, the military confrontation between Israel and Hezbollah in the security zone has not been affected by the fragile 1993 truce.

Israel has asked Syria to rein in Hezbollah, but the Syrians have refused, regarding Hezbollah's operations as legitimate efforts to liberate southern Lebanon. Indeed, Syria has warned that further tension there may sabotage its fitful peace negotiations with Israel.

As for the Lebanese government, its view is that the cycle of bloodshed can only be broken if Israel dismantles the security zone and abides by a 1978 United Nations resolution to leave Lebanon.

Killing field

Israel has offered a phased withdrawal over nine months, provided Lebanon disarms Hezbollah and guarantees to keep the border quiet. But no deal has been struck.

In the absence of one, Israel remains mired in southern Lebanon's killing field, facing two military options.

Israel can escalate the conflict, but the risks are great: overextending itself and exposing the Galilee to a further barrage of rockets and mortars. As we know, this tactic did not work, either in 1978 or in 1982.

Alternatively, Israel can hew to its present strategy of trying to keep Hezbollah (and its rejectionist Palestinian allies) off balance by limited strikes. But this option, obviously, is not a deterrent.

Nearly everyone agrees that a political solution, backed by Syria, is Israel's sole hope of extricating itself from the morass. But such an agreement will remain elusive as long as Israel and Syria are at odds over the terms of a bilateral peace treaty.

The Week in Israel

Oct. 23

• Israel announced the signing of an agreement with China to cooperate on a number of hi-tech projects. The agreement set up a $5-million (US) fund for research in the areas of biotechnology, space technology and computers.

• The Knesset returned from its summer recess for its fifth and final session before the elections scheduled for 1996. All signs point to a tense and stormy assembly.

Oct. 24

• Maariv reported that King Hussein of Jordan is planning to visit Israel in November.

• Davar reported that Qatar had approved a deal with Israel to establish a natural gas pipeline from Qatar to Eilat. Some of the gas will be used by Israeli consumers; the rest will be transported to other countries.

Oct. 25

• Yediot Aharanot reported that the IDF killed two Hezbollah gunmen in southern Lebanon Tuesday night who were preparing to cross the border into northern Israel. No IDF soldiers were injured.

• A heated exchange of words took place between President Ezer Weizman and Labor MK Saleh Tareef during a meeting with Arab Israeli leaders. In a discussion concerning the release of female Palestinian prisoners, the president reiterated that he does not intend to grant clemency to prisoners convicted of murder. He also strongly criticized the Interim Agreement with the Palestinians.

Oct. 26

• Ha'aretz reported that the coordinator of government activities in the territories, Maj.-Gen. Oren Shahor, advised the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee that even though preparations for West Bank elections are in high gear, technical difficulties might prevent them from proceeding as scheduled on Jan. 20.

Oct. 27

• Israel's media announced that U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher will visit President Hafez al-Assad in an effort to reinvigorate stalled peace talks between Syria and Israel. Foreign Minister Shimon Peres did not pin any hopes on Christopher's visit to Damascus, but said "it was worth trying."

JERUSALEM 3000 EVENTS

• Six hundred people were expected in Jerusalem for the seventh meeting of the Neuroendocrine Association.

Israelis, Palestinians speak language of accommodation

By STEPHEN VICTOR
Special to The CJN

Stephen Victor

OTTAWA — The signing of the Oslo 2 accord by Israel and the PLO on Sept. 27 has engendered a range of reactions and emotions in the Jewish community in Canada, reflecting, to be sure, the range of reactions within Israel itself.

While Jews everywhere are united in their quest for lasting peace in the Middle East, there is a diversity of opinion on precisely how this is to be achieved.

Despite this fact, the historical record of the past 20 years shows a clear pattern by both Likud and Labor-led governments of striving for peace agreements with all of Israel's Arab neighbors. The psychological breakthrough achieved when Egyptian president Anwar al-Sadat boldly travelled to Jerusalem in the fall of 1977 paved the way for the Camp David accords and the 1979 Egypt-Israel peace treaty negotiated under then Likud prime minister Menachem Begin.

The autonomy provision of the Camp David accords were never realized, mainly because the Palestinians rejected them at the time. However, finding a workable formula for facilitating self-governing authority for the Palestinians remained a core objective of subsequent Likud, Labor and national-unity governments. This was finally accomplished in the May 1994 Gaza-Jericho First agreement.

Under Oslo 2, Palestinian self-governing authority will be extended to parts of the West Bank, while at the same time permitting the IDF to continue to defend Jewish settlers and areas crucial to Israel's national security.

This is a testing period and there is legitimate concern about how the new arrangements will evolve. The IDF redeployment from Arab centres, upcoming elections for the Palestinian Authority (PA) and the next Israeli general election will all have a significant bearing on subsequent negotiations for the permanent status of settlements, borders, refugees and Jerusalem. It is this uncertainty that is driving the current debate in Israel, a debate that has been conducted for the most part within the parameters of acceptable political behavior.

For all its uncertainties, the process initiated at Oslo is the most comprehensive attempt ever to achieve a peaceful settlement between Israelis and Palestinians, one that seeks to reconcile Palestinian national aspirations with Israeli security requirements and the intense Jewish attachment to ancient holy places in biblical Judea and Samaria. At last, after so much strife during the past 100 years as they vied for a small but precious plot of land, Israelis and Palestinians are speaking the language of compromise and accommodation.

They deserve our support and the support of the government of Canada, as they go about the difficult task of trying to transform the vision of peace into a lasting reality.

Stephen Victor is the national chair of the Canada-Israel Committee.

Israel on alert

the spiritual leader of the militant fundamentalist Hamas movement called on his followers to abandon terror.

In an interview from his jail cell last Friday, Sheik Ahmed Yassin asked his followers to stop attacks on Israel and run in the upcoming Palestinian elections.

Yassin, a wheelchair-bound Muslim cleric serving a life sentence in Israel for ordering the deaths of Palestinians suspected of collaborating with Israelis, founded Hamas in December 1987.

The Islamic Jihad statement was the first confirmation that the man shot outside a hotel in Malta was indeed Shakaki.

Authorities in Malta initially reported last Friday that a man identified as Libyan businessman Ibrahim Shawesh had been shot five times in the head by two men on a motorcycle.

On Sunday, Maltese officials identified the victim as Shakaki after they had asked Israeli police to provide fingerprints of the Islamic Jihad leader.

The Maltese authorities described the assassination of Shakaki as a "professional job."

Shakaki, 43, had reportedly stopped in Malta on his way back to Syria from Libya, where he had met with Libyan leader Muammar Gadhafi to discuss Tripoli's recent expulsion of Palestinians from Libyan soil.

According to some reports, Islamic Jihad and Gadhafi had conspired together on the expulsions, meant to undermine the Palestinian Authority's peace moves with Israel.

While declining to comment on possible Israeli involvement in the shooting, Israeli leaders said they were not sorry the Islamic Jihad leader was dead.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin told reporters that Shakaki had led "a murderous terrorist group that committed murderous attacks against citizens."

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said he did not think the killing would be detrimental to the peace process.

"I think his business was murdering; so if there will be one murderer less, I don't see how it's going to affect the peace process," he said.

Peres added that he was not concerned about the Islamic Jihad threats of terrorist attacks.

"The threats existed all the time," he said. "There's nothing new about that."

Shakaki, a medical doctor who was born in Gaza, established the Islamic Jihad in the early 1980s.

After being expelled by Israel to Lebanon in 1988, Shakaki set up his base of operations in Syria.

The Islamic Jihad, which violently opposes the Israel-Palestinian peace accords, has carried out a number of terrorist attacks against Israel.

This year, the Islamic Jihad claimed responsibility for the Jan. 22 suicide bombing near Netanya, in which 21 people were killed and 60 others wounded.

The group also claimed responsibility for the April 9 bombing of a bus near the Jewish settlement of Netzarim in Gaza. Seven Israeli soldiers, along with American student Alisa Flatow, were killed in the explosion.

Ron Singer — the director of York University's graduate program in theatre and the artistic director of the Randolph School of the Arts, the only private musical theatre school in Canada — has no hard evidence to back up his claim.

But he is reasonably convinced that it is grounded in the truth.

"The Swiss banks have done a masterful job of concealing these (pre-war) accounts. A whole generation of Swiss bankers is living off the backs of Holocaust victims."

Driven by this conviction, Ron Singer intends to continue his search. "I won't give up, though I realize the odds are against me. It's important to pressure the Swiss. We must not let them get away with it."

In his view, the World Jewish Congress, the Israeli government and the international media were instrumental in pushing Swiss banks to try to resolve the issue once and for all.

Ron Singer is hopeful because banking secrecy laws in Switzerland are scheduled to be relaxed on Jan. 1, 1996.

The new regulations will make it easier for people such as him to file claims.

Sergio Karas, a Toronto lawyer who has expressed an interest in the Singer case, said that the Swiss Banking Association now recognizes that virtually none of the claimants can provide incontrovertible proof to support their claims.

A pre-war photograph of Velvel Singer (centre), seen with his wife (left), who was killed in the Holocaust, and their son Itzhik, who also perished. The girl in the picture remains unidentified. The woman on the right, Velvel's sister Sarah, lives in Arizona.

Under the proposed system, information provided by claimants will be compared to existing bank records for a possible match, said Karas, whose own family is originally from Lodz.

Ron Singer is optimistic that this method will weed out fanciful claims from real ones.

On Dec. 17, Ron Singer plans to travel to London and Zurich to do whatever he can "to further things."

His aunt Mary, a resident of the Baycrest Centre, has encouraged him in his efforts. But almost every other member of his family is frankly skeptical that the claim will finally be accepted.

Essentially, Ron Singer is driven by two motivations.

"First, a desire to force the Swiss Banking Association to deal honestly with survivors' savings. There are possibly billions of dollars in Swiss coffers.

"And, of course, there is a search for an inheritance."

Israel assailed at summit

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

AMMAN — Mideast leaders launched their regional economic summit last Sunday by plunging into the ongoing dispute over Jerusalem and Israeli treatment of the Palestinians.

While Israel and Jordan urged rapid progress toward modernization of the economies of the Middle East to attract foreign investment, Egypt and the Palestinians used the podium to call for Israeli withdrawal and a Palestinian state.

But the rhetoric did not halt the proceedings, and by mid-afternoon, delegates announced the establishment of two regional bodies: a tourism centre and a business council. Tourism Minister Uzi Baram represented Israel in signing the charter of the tourism centre, along with envoys from Jordan, Egypt, the Palestinian Authority (PA), Cyprus, Tunisia and Morocco.

PA Chairman Yasser Arafat changed the businesslike tone of the conference opening by reciting a litany of complaints against Israel. In a harsh speech, he accused Israel of destroying Palestinian infrastructure since 1967, and condemned the extended closure of the territories. He said the Palestinians are losing $6 million daily because of Israeli restrictions on workers trying to cross the Green Line.

Contact maintained with Sarajevo's remaining Jews

By CYNTHIA GASNER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Forty children from the Jewish community of Sarajevo sent a poster-size letter house as a thank you to Helen Marr, president of the International Council of Jewish Women (ICJW).

On receiving the card, Marr said she felt privileged to hold her position, adding "The relationship with the children of Sarajevo is one which evokes deep emotions of love, humility and — yes — anger, anger and outrage caused by the inhumanity of war and the devastation wrought on the innocent women, men and children."

Marr, who has travelled extensively for ICJW, is in communication with Sonja Elezar, a leader in the Sarajevo Jewish community.

Recognizing the desperate plight of the residents of Sarajevo, Marr began sending school supplies, hygiene products and other needed items. She says the postage costs more than the items.

"Sonja is working to make the lives of the children more pleasant and helping them maintain their Jewishness," Marr says.

Since the break-up of the former Yugoslavia, which had an affiliate of the ICJW (now divided into several affiliates, one being Sarajevo), the 500 remaining Jews in Sarajevo have suffered from shortages including footwear, warm clothing and medical supplies. There is no transportation and they can't travel from one city to another.

In gratitude for the parcels, the children created the letter house, with a window that opens to show the pictures of the children. A letter enclosed in the doorway of the house is addressed:

Helen Marr

"Dear Aunt Helen.

"Thank you very much for your letter. We were not able to answer you on time, but now send you our letter house.

"You can see us in our community on Purim's masquerade. We are alive and good as we can be, except one friend, Ljiljana Jancic (12 years old). She was killed in her garden during grenading.

"Thank you so much for your help and thinking of us. With love, Children from Jewish Community of Sarajevo."

"I'm struck by their optimism which is manifested by the very bright primary colors of the letter house — all in the face of indescribable and unthinkable adversity," Marr says..

She says she just received a fax from Elezar "telling me of the need for warm socks, slippers, and warm clothing."

To help, please call Marr at Council House, 416-633-5100.

Plundered billions said to be in West European banks

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — In addition to money already discovered in Switzerland, "billions of dollars" in cash and property plundered from European Jews during and immediately after World War II is in banks and under government control in other Western European countries, U.S. News and World Report says in its next issue.

The money is in financial institutions in France, Belgium, Holland, Luxembourg, Italy and Scandinavia, the report says.

Edgar Bronfman, president of the World Jewish Congress (WJC) and head of an international drive to reclaim Jewish assets taken during the Holocaust, noted that vast sums were also stashed in banks in neutral Sweden before and during World War II, the magazine added.

The deposits, according to independent studies, included assets that Jews had sent for safekeeping and money and gold stolen by the Nazis from Holocaust victims.

Bronfman says these deposits, which were unclaimed at the end of the war, are still held by the Swedish banks.

WJC Secretary-General Israel Singer adds that the rightful owners of much of the booty can be traced, because of the Germans' obsession with keeping records.

Bronfman wants the assets to go to heirs of the victims, European Jewish communities and worldwide Jewish communal needs.

Ophuls film lays bare France's wartime disgrace

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

In retrospect, The Sorrow and the Pity is no longer really shocking. But when it burst upon France in the early 1970s, it became a cause celebre.

Those who were displeased with Marcel Ophuls' documentary were indignant because it laid bare Vichy France's shameless collaboration with Nazi Germany.

In the immediate post-war period, the French had created a self-serving myth about their allegedly exemplary conduct during the German occupation. The Sorrow and the Pity ruthlessly exposed this fiction, and France was revealed as a nation which had not only submitted itself supinely and with alacrity to Germany, but had zealously persecuted its Jewish population.

Ophuls' four-hour film, part of a retrospective of his body of work, will be screened at the Art Gallery of Ontario on Nov. 5 at 1:30 p.m. under the auspices of Cinematheque Ontario.

The Sorrow and the Pity pulls no punches, despite being rather low-key and subtle. Based on file footage and contemporary interviews with such personalities as Pierre Mendes-France and Anthony Eden, it builds a convincing case against the mendacity of the Vichy regime.

What is beyond doubt is that latent anti-Semitism surfaced during this benighted period. The bourgeoisie embraced the view that it was preferable to live under Hitler rather than under Leon Blum, the Jewish politician who had been prime minister of France shortly before the war.

"You can't imagine the prejudice of that time," muses Mendes-France, a Jew who went on to serve his country as prime minister.

In 1940, Vichy France passed a series of punitive anti-Semitic laws which reduced the Jewish community to second-class citizenship and worse. Eventually, Jews were rounded up by the French police and shipped to concentration camps.

As Jews were eased out of France's cultural milieu, Jewish names were erased from French film credits and a French-language version of Jud Suss — a notorious anti-Semitic German movie — appeared.

As The Sorrow and the Pity notes, the French did not dwell on their stinging defeat too long. Life returned to normal, as race tracks, theatres, restaurants and shops reopened. "You couldn't get a table at Maxim's for love or money," observes one man who recalls the era.

The French underground notwithstanding, personal relations developed between the French and the Germans. Indeed, one German officer remembers that there was little opposition to the German army's presence in Alsace-Lorraine, which had been retaken from Germany in World War I.

In short, France disgraced itself, letting itself be lulled into the belief that it was better to collaborate with than to resist Germany.

In addition to The Sorrow and the Pity, Cinematheque will screen five other documentaries by Ophuls.

They are: The Troubles We've Seen: A History of Journalism In Wartime (Nov. 3 and 4);November Days (Nov. 8); The Memory of Justice (Nov. 12); Hotel Terminus (Nov. 19); and A Sense of Loss (Nov. 20).

Beloved Yiddish songs presented on CD with TLC

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Rising Towards the Seraphim is a CD of 15 beloved Yiddish songs that represents five years of tender loving care lavished on the language by Toronto singer Honey Novick.

So much so that the 12-page liner booklet accompanying the disc with both English and Yiddish lyrics, plus extensive notes, is as valuable to Yiddish lovers as the record itself.

Now available in many stores, Rising Towards the Seraphim is addressed primarily to women, but it includes early social protest songs and other topics which cover all genders. One of these is Steam, Steam, Steam which starts out as a tenant's complaint to the landlord about lack of heat, but soon turns into a generalized satire on the human condition.

Another in this genre is Dire-Gelt (Rent Money) which is as subtle about society's ills as a blunderbuss.

Other titles are Di Mezinke Oysegegbn, A Malekh Veynt, A Tribute to Sholom Secunda, Mickey Matzi, Yiddish iz Mayn Loshn, The Birth of Moses, A Shnirele Perele, Ma Yafim or Palestinian Nights, Di Arbuzn, Neyn Name!, Her Nor Du Sheyn Meydele, Der Fodim and In Der Finster.

Accompanying Novick on the CD are musicians Brahm Goldhamer and Richard M. Sacks. Brina Rose and Misha Allen helped with the translations. For information, 416-782-7944.

Israel's economy enjoying a boom

JERUSALEM — Israel's economy, fueled by robust immigration, will grow by 6.8 per cent this year, far more than initially predicted and one of the highest rates in the developed world, the Central Bureau of Statistics announced.

Business production is expected to be up eight per cent this year, an increase similar to last year's figure, while personal expenditure is expected to rise about four per cent per capita, after a six per cent rise last year.

Israel's economy has grown by more than a third since 1990, when a large number of immigrants began arriving from the former Soviet Union. More than 600,000 immigrants have arrived in the past five years.

Ampal now seeking institutional investors

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — The American Israel Corporation (Ampal) is a holding company whose emphasis is on involving its investors in a profitable relationship with Israel.

Ampal acquires businesses located in Israel or that are Israel-related. Its parent company, Bank Hapoalim, currently owns 71 per cent of the company.

With an estimated net asset value of $291 million, Ampal has equity in 11 public and 26 private companies in the fields of hotel and leisure, real estate, basic industry and high technology.

Ampal's Toronto-born chairman of the board Shlomo Recht, an accountant, recently spoke with The CJN.

Recht joined Ampal in 1981 as the VP of accounting and became chairman of the board in 1994.

His mission in Toronto was to raise the company's profile with institutional investors, he said. "The professional institutional investor is looking for emerging markets. If people become aware of what Ampal is, they'll buy the stock."

Some of Ampal's assets include a 46 per cent interest in Moriah Hotels, one of Israel largest hotel chains; a 50 per cent interest in Coral World International, a marine park developer and operator; a 21 per cent interest in Davidson-Atai Publishers; and a 54.7 per cent interest in Pri Ha'emek, a food processing company.

Most of the companies Ampal invests in are established private companies, Recht said.

Ampal invests in hi-tech industries through its 50 per cent ownership of Trinet Venture Capital Ltd. and through direct acquisitions. Its holdings include a 10.6 per cent ownership of Teledata Communications, 4.25 per cent of Memco Software and 4.1 per cent of M-systems Flash Disk pioneers.

The profit from hi-tech investments is disproportionate to the investment because of its higher risk, Recht said.

The company invested in Coral World because the concept of a marine park with an underwater observatory was innovative, he said. "We're in the tank and the fish are looking at us from the outside." The first park opened in Eilat 20 years ago. Today there are four locations and with a fifth to open in 1997.

Ampal stock — it trades on the American stock exchange under the symbol AIS.A — is seriously undervalued according to analysts at Lehman Brothers, a New York investment bank, Recht said.

"The stock is trading at 27 per cent below the net asset value."

The stock is low is because of the uncertainty as to who will gain control of the company, Recht explained. The government requires Bank Hapoalim to reduce its holdings to a 25 per cent share by 1996.

"[In the investment business] you can't win everything. What you have to do is win a lot," Recht said. "Our principal interest is to make money. Our investors are doing something for Israel, but they're also doing something for themselves."

All figures are in Canadian dollars unless otherwise stated.

Tender Issued For Int'l Phone Services To Compete With Bezeq

JERUSALEM — The Communications Ministry has issued the long-awaited tender for international telecommunications services to compete with Bezeq.

Bezeq has enjoyed a monopoly in the highly profitable field of international services, which accounts for about a third of its $1.5 billion in annual revenues.

The ministry plans to choose two additional carriers. Each group is to be made up of local and foreign partners. So far, only one consortium - headed by Aurec Software Co., a local firm, Southwestern Bell of the U.S. and Italian giant Stet - has announced its intention to take part.

Abjac Announces Gas Find

JERUSALEM — Oil and gas exploration firm Abjac Mazal announced recently that it had struck a mixture of methane and water at its Esther 3A site near Kibbutz Neot Mordechai.

The gusher erupted from a depth of between 78.5 and 80.5 metres, as logging equipment was being removed from the drill site. In the past the Hula Valley has produced gas in commercial quantities.

Abjac intends to execute a series of tests in order to assess the amount of gas which might be produced and to ensure the deposit is not part of stratum discovered at the Esther 4 site.

Mikvah Found On Nevis: An old, one-storey building behind the modern administration building in Charlestown, Nevis, may possibly be a mikvah (ceremonial bath) and part of the oldest Jewish synagogue in the Caribbean, according to Dr. Vincent K. Hubbard, a local historian.

The original function of the building had been forgotten perhaps as much as 150 years ago, and recently the building was used as a government storage site.

In 1993, a U.S. archeological team traced the building's history to one of the two oldest Jewish settlements in the West Indies. Historic documents in Holland reportedly establish the existence of a synagogue on Nevis prior to 1688.

David Robinson, curator of the Nevis Historical and Conversation Society, is credited with rediscovering the site. Walking to work one morning, he noticed that the usually locked wooden-planked door was ajar and curiosity got the best of him.

Upon entering, Robinson noticed three stone barrel-vaulted ceiling panels supported by three stone columns topped by arches that extended to the walls. Robinson recognized immediately that the structure had no resemblance to typical Nevisian masonry and felt certain he had rediscovered the island's "lost Temple."

Nevis shul traced to 1688

Because of Nevis's relatively large Jewish population in the 17th century and its well-known Jewish cemetery, many scholars and historians believed a synagogue existed but didn't know exactly where. Records in Amsterdam making reference to the Nevis synagogue in 1688 make it older than the 1732 synagogue in Curacao, believed to be the oldest in the Caribbean. The Jewish communities on both islands can be traced back to the 1650s.

The earliest date on the 19 tombstones in the Jewish cemetery on Nevis is 1658. A stone-walled path, known locally as Jews Walk or Jews Alley, originates at the archeological site and terminates at the cemetery less than 100 yards away.

Headed by Dr. Robert Zeitlin, the archeological team has determined that the double-vaulted ceiling is of Spanish origin. A large cistern could have collected rain from the roof or might have been used to warm water for bathing in a mikvah.

The foundation for what could have been a synagogue was revealed next to the building after the archeologists removed an enormous quantity of stone and rubble. According to Hubbard, there is considerable private sector interest in restoring the building as an historical site.

England's Peak District: The Peak District of central England is a popular area for walking. The southern edge of the region, with its moorlands, dales and meadows, provides especially intriguing terrain. Two companies offer walking tours.

First Ascent's Independent Walking Holidays (tel. 01298 83545) allows visitors to go at their own pace across eight to 10 miles of well-marked paths in a day, with luggage transferred between hotels or inns. The Old Furnace Walking Holidays (tel. 01538 703331) offers fully guided three-day walks throughout the year.

Party Planner Corrections

In last week's Party Planner there were a couple of mistakes worth correcting. On page B18, it should have said the owner of The Invitation List (905-764-1371) is Brenda Cooper-Geffen. On page 27, we mispelled the name of Arlene Shessel, the owner of Face Up To It (905-660-7695). The CJN apologizes for any embarrassment caused by these errors.

Eye on Arts

by Bill Gladstone

Peretz Remembered: Eighty years after the death of acclaimed Yiddish writer Y.L. Peretz, several Jewish organizations are sponsoring a lecture in his honor by Yiddish scholar Itche Goldberg.

Trained as a lawyer, Peretz wrote short stories, sketches and essays during the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Although his literary activities were centred in Warsaw, his works were widely read in the Yiddish press, both in Europe and the United States.

A recurrent theme in his writing is the demand for justice, even if that means challenging God to provide more of it.

Goldberg, an expert on Peretz, is a professor of Yiddish at City University of New York. He speaks Nov. 5, 1.30 p.m., at the Jewish Book Fair, Leah Posluns Theatre, North York. Sponsors include the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto, Friends of Yiddish, Kultur Gezelshaft and the Laybl Basman Fund. Tickets $6.

Quotable Quotes: In case Livent Inc. needs more quotable quotes, here are some laudatory comments about Sunset Boulevard, the musical now playing at North York's Ford Centre for the Performing Arts.

What makes the North York offering outshine the London production, which (readers of Eye On Arts may recall) both exhilarated and disappointed us last year? Beyond doubt, it's the extraordinary cast.

Diahann Carroll gives an awesome, full, dramatic portrait of faded film-star Norma Desmond — "Now that's a performance!" we exclaimed as we left the theatre — and a masterful, always credible Rex Smith provides perfect ballast as screenwriter Joe Gillis. Walter Charles as Max von Mayerling, Anita Louise Combe as Betty Schaefer, John Braden as Cecil B. DeMille and the other supporting actors are pillars.

The set is exquisite, the staging a technological marvel, the orchestra in perfect tune, the story as taut as a riveting Greek drama. Andrew Lloyd Webber's music — like his transmogrification of Billy Wilder's superb 1950 movie script into a '90s musical — is excellent but uneven.

Director Trevor Nunn et al have wisely removed some bits of stage business that cluttered the London production. Don't be dismayed that this musical is weighted down with all the technological accoutrements that modern audiences are supposed to like. It's still highly worth seeing. 416-872-2222.

Two Holocaust Films: Now After All These Years (Germany, 1979) chronicles the experiences of a Jew who returns to the German village of his birth to meet with and confront its townspeople. So We Said Goodbye (Israel, 1991) is about Yaakov saying goodbye to his son and recalling farewells to family members in Poland 50 years before.

The Toronto Jewish Film Society is screening both films (with English subtitles) at the Art Gallery of Ontario, Jackman Hall, Toronto, Sun. Nov. 5, 7.30 p.m. 416-924-6211.

Ullman opus set for Nov. 2

The Penderecki String Quartet will be performing Viktor Ullman's String Quartet op. 46, No.3 on Nov. 2 at the Glenn Gould Studio.

Ullman was one of the renowned group of composers held at the Theresienstadt concentration camp during World War II.

A highly respected and critically acclaimed conductor and composer of his time, Ullman was taken to Theresienstadt in September 1942. He completed the string quartet in January 1943. Sensing his fate, Ullman was able to hide a copy with friends at the camp. Ullman and his wife were gassed at Auschwitz on Oct. 16, 1944.

Ullman's work is said to be a textbook, classic case of the triumph of the human spirit over unspeakable evil.

The Penderecki String Quartet are considered by many to be Canada's premiere string quartet. The youngest member of the group is their violist Dov Scheindlin, 25, of Montreal. He is currently artist in residence at Wilfrid Laurier University in Waterloo, Ont.

The concert is part of a three-concert series at the Glen Gould Studio, 250 Front St.W. They will be recorded for later broadcast on the CBC Stereo program The Arts Tonight.

Other compositions to be played Nov. 2 are Joseph Haydn's String Quartet No.78 in C major and Antonin Dvorak's Quintet in A Major for Piano and Strings, op.81.

For ticket information call 416-205-5555. The concert begins at 8 p.m.

Business Profile

Barry Sherman built multi-million dollar enterprise

Pharmaceutical kingpin always in a hurry

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — When Barry Sherman went into the pharmaceutical business fresh out of university, his mother put up all her assets as collateral so that he could get a business loan.

"My mother had the utmost confidence in my ability," he said, admitting that she had taken a tremendous chance on him. "We could have gone broke."

But her gamble paid off. Today he heads the privately-owned Apotex, a pharmaceutical company that manufactures predominantly generic drugs. With 30 locations around the world and 2,000 employees, the company's annual sales exceed $600 million worldwide.

Sherman, 53, expects sales to hit the $1 billion mark within two years, he said recently at the company's headquarters in Weston.

Prescription drugs are an estimated $6-billion-a-year industry in Canada. Generic drugs account for $750 million or 13 per cent of sales. Apotex has a 40 per cent share of the Canadian market with $300 million in sales.

Sherman recently changed positions from president to chairman of the board and CEO, promoting Jack Kay, a former vice-president, to president and chief operating officer in charge of day-to-day affairs.

With the growth of the company, he's had to divest himself of this responsibility, Sherman explained. "There used to be only two of us in the beginning. I did the books and swept the floor."

He'll be concentrating on corporate expansion, scientific development and the supervision of all the litigation, he said.

"It's the nature of the industry. They [the big multinational drug companies] are all trying to thwart our growth."

Sherman is active in product development — he's self taught as a pharmaceutical chemist — and he has 12 patents pending on technical inventions for making tablets.

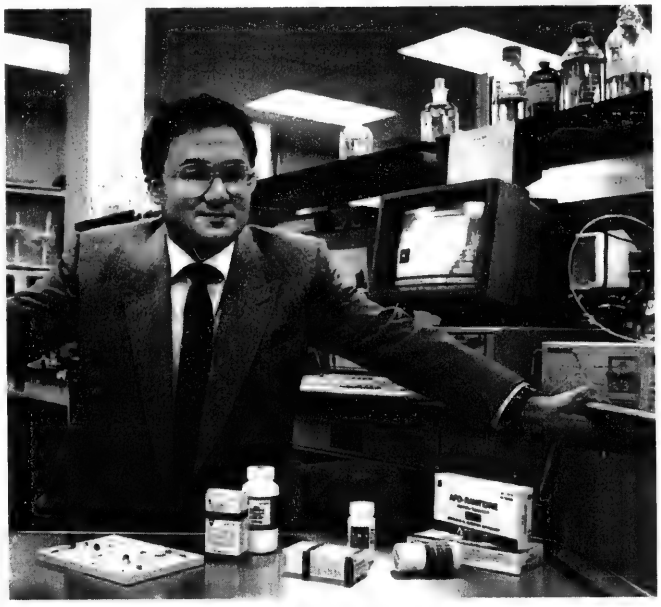
He said he's well-suited to this industry because he has a knack for business, science and law. But his venture into pharmaceuticals came about more by chance than by design.

A gold medalist, Sherman graduated from engineering at the University of Toronto (U of T) in 1965 and went on to get a PhD in aeronautical engineering from MIT. He finished his masters and doctorate in two and a half years — for both degrees.

"I was in a bit of a hurry, he said. "I have always been in a hurry."

He had planned on getting into a science-related business and went into pharmaceuticals because a business opportunity arose shortly after he completed his studies.

As a student he had spent many summers working at Empire Laboratories, which was owned by his uncle Lou Winters. Winters died in 1965, leaving the company in the hands of trustees who "ran the company into the ground," Sherman said.



Barry Sherman is the CEO of Apotex. [Daniels & Glionna photography]

He bought the company's assets with some partners in 1967. He said he thought he could make a go of it because it was a business he knew.

At 24, Sherman became president of Empire Laboratories, a generic drug manufacturing company.

Clients coming to see him were surprised by his age, he said. "They would ask me where my father was when they had an appointment to see the president. Now I'm one of the old men in the industry."

He and his partners sold Empire in 1973 after making it modestly profitable, he said. "I felt if I started from scratch I'd be a lot better off. I knew what to do right to run a progressive and efficient business."

When Sherman founded Apotex 21 years ago, the laws were particularly favorable for generic drug companies, he said. In 1967, the Liberal government under then prime minister Pierre Trudeau instituted compulsory licensing to reduce the cost of drugs — generic are half the price of patent drugs.

The generic companies bought licences from the multinationals to produce patented drugs, paying a royalty fee on their sales.

They still had to do four to five years of research to get government approval for a generic drug, Sherman explained. "There's no difference in the quality of the drug. The quality is assured by the health protection branches of the government."

The major turning point for Appotex came in 1980 when it became the first generic company to sell propranolol, a heart and blood pressure medication, he said.

"We're very aggressive. We were first on the Canadian market with most of the major generic drugs."

He attributes the company's rapid growth to its heavy investment in research. "We've ploughed everything we could earn and borrow into research." The company also develops new products.

Sherman claimed the growth of Apotex has not yet been hampered by Bill C-91, the law passed by the Conservative government in 1993, which ended compulsory licensing and extended patent protection to the multinationals.

The law has reduced the competition among generic drug companies, Sherman noted. "Ironically, in the short run it's been good for us. We're big enough to get around the barriers. It's not good for us as an industry in the long run, or for the health system."

The foreign companies do as little as possible to develop Canadian technology but import everything they sell, Sherman said. "Their raison d'être is to exploit the Canadian market. We're a Canadian company. We like to create job opportunities in Canada."

He said he's committed to establishing a strong Canadian pharmaceutical industry: he is building $130-million state of the art manufacturing plants in Etobicoke and North York, and he plans to expand Apotex' Winnipeg-based bio-technology division.

He also wants to create opportunities for scientists in Canada. This week the Medical Research Council of Canada announced it will be giving a $5-million grant to the Toronto Cell Group at U of T. Eighty per cent of this money will come from Apotex.

In 1993, the company gave $2 million to Mt. Sinai Hospital for a research chair in oncology and this year it pledged $6 million to Baycrest Centre's new Cognitive Disorder Centre.

"We expect to be the largest funder of medical research in Canada in the next 10 years," Sherman said. He also supports United Jewish Appeal, Mount Sinai and the Weizmann Institute.

He doesn't have time to be very active in the community, but his wife Honey is involved with a number of community organizations, he said. "She does the work. I write the cheques."

He has to work hard because the pharmaceutical business is very complex, he said. "Things change so rapidly. New products that are important one day are not as important the next and government policies change."

Sherman is a self-professed workaholic. "I'm an obsessive Type A. I work 9:30 to 10 six days a week and it's not enough," he said. "My wife says to me, 'Stop working so hard: life is short. I tell her, life is short: I have to work hard to get the work done.' "

Dear Ella,

Perhaps some of your readers with a backyard pool have experienced our dilemma for which you may have some insight.

My brother-in-law would call us up almost every weekend this past summer to come over for a swim. The days were hot and we couldn't say no. Even when we had other guests planned and told him so, he would hint that there's lots of room in the pool and that we shouldn't worry since we don't have to entertain his family. The four of them would invariably enjoy our refreshments and most often would bring nothing over, except once some donuts.

Next year we'd like to say no. By the way they never reciprocate or invite us to their home! Any ideas?

Schnorred Out

Dear Schnorred Out,

I understand that you don't want to hurt your brother-in-law's feelings and that you are afraid of embarrassing yourself, but everyone has a right to privacy.

Your weekends are your own. They are your free time with your family to do with as YOU choose. Don't feel uncomfortable saying no. It is your right and it is not unreasonable. Don't let your brother-in-law rob you of the weekends that you are entitled to.

Explain to him that you would like some time alone with your family and you will give him a call when he and his family can come over.

There is no way around it. You have to tell him so you can be free to enjoy your weekends as you please.

Readers may submit their questions to Ella at The CJN. But Ella is not a professional counsellor. She brings to the questions posed by readers her unique brand of earthy wisdom. Her advice is not a replacement for medical, legal or any other advice. For serious problems, consult a professional.

Vol. 3, Issue 1, Autumn 95.

DO THE RIGHT THING

UJA's Young Leadership Network is urging young adults to "do the right thing" and support the campaign's Three Year Vision. For the first time, donors are being asked to pledge not only for 1996 but for each of the next two years as well.

Even though many young adults, according to YLN co-chair Gord Wiseman, are "in transition" and "don't even know whether they will have jobs next year," he's confident The Three Year Vision is going to be a success. "It will," he says, "free up time for volunteers to cultivate new gifts and spread fundraising responsibility to a wider group of people."

YLN's other co-chair, Robin Kachuck finds "a definite interest in the concept and an understanding of what it's all about."

"The Three Year Vision has been going really well," reports Young Business Network co-chair Wendy Woods. "We want to sell the idea because it makes so much sense."

The figures themselves support Woods. Nearly 60% of young adult donors who have pledged to date, have committed to the Three Year Vision.

"It's particularly nice to see the Campaign having so much success in the tremendously volatile construction sector," Young Construction Network co-chair Les Aaron tells inT.O. "Canvassers themselves feel more comfortable than ever about selling the concept." ★

STREETS ARE SWEET FOR SIMON KALKSTEIN

For a self-confessed "downtowner," Simon Kalkstein's job couldn't be better.

As supervisor of the Jewish Family & Child Service downtown branch, Kalkstein conducts a lot of his work where he feels most comfortable.

"I like the streets," he admits. "I grew up downtown. I know many of the downtown characters."

There's Florence, for example, who lives anywhere on Bloor from Christie to Spadina. Kalkstein will always stop to chat with her, making sure to leave a loonie in her hand before wishing her well and saying goodbye.

JF & CS Downtown Branch Supervisor Simon Kalkstein in front of a graffiti decorated wall on the city streets he loves. (Photo: Stephen Epstein)

After graduating with his Masters of Social Work from U of T, Kalkstein started with JF&CS 19 years ago. He was appointed head of the downtown division in 1989, and he's seen a lot of changes.

"I thought the downtown Jewish community would be mostly indigent and elderly, but it's become much more middle class."

If anyone understands Jewish life in the city core, it's Simon Kalkstein. There's no place he would rather be. ★

WORKING ON THE MARGINS OF JEWISH SOCIETY ★

Living downtown may be trendy, but for Simon Kalkstein and his six social workers, there's another side of city life which isn't so cool.

Kalkstein supervises the southern branch of Jewish Family & Child Service, where his case load of 300 represents nearly 3% of the estimated Jewish population below Eglinton. A third of JF&CS downtown clients receive supplementary financial assistance, funded by UJA.

These days, Kalkstein and his staff spend a lot of time assisting 40-50 ex-psychiatric patients. "A lot of them don't feel connected to the Jewish community," he tells inT.O.

JF&CS is in the midst of an innovative outreach program to find Jewish ex-psychiatric patients and provide services for them. JF&CS has invited them to a Rosh Hashana meal, and earlier this year, conducted a Passover seder on their behalf. As well, two downtown apartments have been set aside for seven one-time patients who are successfully living together.

"A lot of chronic schizophrenics are not that interesting to psychiatrists," Kalkstein says. "Sometimes we have to be like their surrogate family."

For nearly two decades, JF&CS has been running a Wednesday morning bagel club at its downtown Bloor Jewish Community Centre headquarters. For the club's regulars, according to Kalkstein, the bagels, coffee and conversation are just like home.

"Six or seven people show up every week. One guy has been coming for 15 years."

Kalkstein and his crew have seen just about everything. They've helped runaway girls who rejected their Orthodox upbringing, a young Jewish woman who married a drug pusher and even non-Jews who have heard impressive stories about the work JF&CS does.

The job can be rough, especially when you're trying to help people who have severe psychiatric problems.

"I have very senior staff," stresses Kalkstein. "There are some very difficult clients here...some marginal clients. When someone is hearing voices, it's very difficult to deal with him." ★

A MESSAGE FROM THE CHAIRS

YLN MEANS MORE THAN FUNDRAISING

Welcome to inT.O., the voice of UJA's Young Leadership Network. We are the umbrella group that includes four young fundraising networks - Young Adults Division (YAD), Young Business Network (YBN), Young Construction Network (YCN) and Young Professionals Network (YPN).

YLN focuses primarily on education and leadership development in order to nurture a meaningful and lasting spirit of giving. Highlights of the past year include an intense mission to Prague and Israel, Yachdav in Israel for young adults from around the world, an informal four part series on current Jewish issues, a full day leadership retreat, a fun filled social evening and the first National Young Leadership Conference in Montreal.

Our generation's relationship with the Jewish community differs from that of our parents and grandparents. Many of us lead secular, assimilated lives, yet we feel the importance of being Jewish. We are proud of our heritage but somehow we have trouble expressing this in words and actions. Often our ties to the community are only through Jewish fundraising organizations such as UJA.

YLN tries to bring another element to traditional fundraising. Through speakers, events, direct service projects and missions to Israel, we are creating stronger connections to the community. We know that our community can always count on the support of YLN members and with that support, the link to our past and our future will never be broken. ✸

UJA DOLLARS WORK FOR IMMIGRANT TEENS IN JERUSALEM

If you're looking for a quick history of Israel, visit the Israel Goldstein Youth Aliyah Village in Jerusalem.

Established in 1949, the UJA - supported centre mirrors the country's immigration patterns since independence.

Today, 125 teenagers from both Israeli and immigrant backgrounds go to school and live in the village. Many of the local youngsters are from troubled or economically deprived families. Yet, according to spokeswoman Judy Segal, living in a youth village has no negative implications. "There is no stigma attached to it," she says. "In fact, people are proud of it."

Dana Bitan, 16, came to the village from Ethiopia after a traumatic voyage 11 years ago. Dana's little sister died en route, while she walked with her grandparents to Sudan. "We travelled at night and hid by day," she remembers.

In the spring of 1990 and throughout the following year, the village accepted waves of children from the former Soviet Union. One of them was 14 year old Olga Chertok, who arrived in Israel alone when she was only 10. Her father is an engineer near Beersheva.

The arrival of kids from Bosnia, starting in 1992, posed several unprecedented challenges for the village. The children were rushed away from a war zone without their parents and there was virtually no way to communicate with them. "The biggest problem was finding out if their parents were alive or dead," recalls Esther Pinto, who became a volunteer mother figure for the children. "They needed to talk in their language," which was something Pinto could do. "They cried a lot. One boy told me he felt like an orbiting satellite that had just crashed. I taught them what to do, what to eat and how to handle the bureaucracy."

Eventually, most of the parents found their way to Israel and the Bosnian immigrants are adjusting well.

The Israel Goldstein Youth Aliyah Village is one of 60 across the country - many of them heavily financed by UJA through the Jewish Agency. ✸

SINGLES REGISTRY... TAKES TORONTO BY STORM

There's always something new and exciting happening at the Jewish Singles Registry of Toronto. This month is no exception for the community based Jewish organization, which offers its members the easiest and least threatening way for Jewish singles to enter the dating scene.

In just over two and a half years, the Registry has become Toronto's largest Jewish singles dating service, with over 800 members. Already, 9 couples who found each other through the Jewish Singles Registry have gotten married; 36 couples are dating steadily and close to 70 phone numbers are given out each week.

What makes the Jewish Singles Registry so attractive? Its pro-active approach to dating. Most services require clients to wait while attempts are made to match them up. At the Registry, members do their own choosing. With hundreds of detailed biography profiles (including photographs) at their fingertips, they decide who's right for them. Members have the option of going on as many or as few dates as they wish, provided of course that both parties say yes. With membership constantly increasing, there are always new people to choose from. The J.S.R. "minimum date guarantee" lets new registrants join the service virtually risk free.

Most singles realize that meeting someone special does not happen by itself. Now they have a chance to take the initiative. At the J.S.R., you get to preview every potential date before any phone call occurs.

The office is open six days a week, including evening hours. If you cannot reach a J.S.R. representative on your first try, just leave a message and someone will get right back to you. It's that simple! The phone number is 416-398-7068. ✸

This space is sponsored by the Jewish Singles Registry.

One Plus One is fun
Unlike any other dating service, The Registry offers an unlimited number of introductions that you alone select from our extensive bio/photo library.
Call today, because if you're looking for the "right one," The Jewish Singles Registry is it.

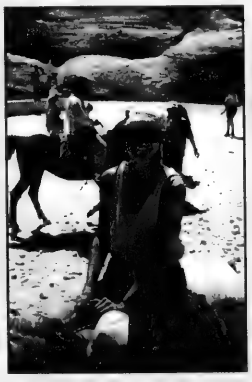
YACHDAV 1995 - DISCOVERING OUR COMMON BOND

It's not often that you get the opportunity to see Israel, while meeting young Jewish people from all over the world. Yachdav, sponsored by UJA, which took place during the first week of August, was one such experience. It's an international trip to Israel which takes place every 3 years. Of Yachdav's 500 delegates from 20 countries, the Canadian contingent, at 160, was the largest. The itinerary included sightseeing, social activities and unique educational opportunities.

The mission began with an exclusively Canadian, three day visit to Tiberias, where we enjoyed kayaking, wine tasting and visiting Beit Shean, one of the world's most extensive archeological sites. The real highlight of the pre-mission was Canada Centre in Metulla, a town situated on the Lebanese border. The Canada Centre recreation complex, established in 1990, was made possible by generous Canadian UJA donations. It's a wonderful facility, with both an indoor and an outdoor pool, a basketball court, a workout room, and Israel's first skating rink, where Misha Shmerkin, Israel's only winter Olympic contender trained. We were even treated to a performance by the star athlete. Many Israelis and even Lebanese residents travel substantial distances to use the centre's resources.



The most heart warming part of the visit was seeing young families, many of them new immigrants, enjoying a facility made possible by Canadian fundraising efforts. At that moment, I felt that my UJA donation made a difference. Following the pre-mission, international participants met in Jerusalem to start the week. The kick-off was a beautiful, open air dinner addressed by Israel's Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, who talked about Israel's new strength and her desire for peace.

From that night on, our week was action packed. We greeted a plane of olim from Kiev, toured a military base, and were fortunate enough to be one of the first Jewish groups to visit Jordan. We met and developed friendships with people from all over the world. Each moment was interesting and exciting.

The word Yachdav means together, and the name could not have been more appropriate than during our Shabbat dinner in Jerusalem. We sang Israeli songs and danced the hora around the tables. Suddenly all cultural and linguistic barriers disappeared as our common and strongest bond emerged. As we shared this special moment, we realized that we were together as Jews. ✸

WHAT'S COOKING?

InT.O. is pleased to introduce recipes by Barbie Casselman, one of Canada's most well known nutritionists. Barbie has been called "The Queen of Lean" by Report on Business Magazine. She is the author of Good-for-you cooking: A Healthy Eating Guide and a consultant to Loblaws in the development of President's Choice Too Good To Be True products.

Here's Barbie's New Year's Chicken recipe:

4-4 oz. skinless & boneless chicken breasts
1/2 cup dried prunes
1/4 cup dried apricots
1 TBSP olive oil
2 TBSPs white vinegar
1/2 cup dry white wine
1 clove garlic, minced
1 TBSP honey
1 TBSP oregano
1/4 tsp salt
2 medium sweet potatoes peeled and cut into cubes

Barbie Casselman

1. Place chicken breasts in casserole dish.
2. Combine next nine ingredients in bowl and pour over chicken.
3. Cover and marinate in refrigerator for several hours or overnight.
4. Before baking chicken, place sweet potato cubes in a sauce pan with water to cover. Bring to a boil and then boil gently for three minutes. Drain.
5. Take chicken from refrigerator and add the sweet potatoes. Bake covered at 350F for 30 to 40 minutes until chicken and sweet potatoes are fully cooked.

Makes 4 servings.

TORONTO STRIKES THE RIGHT NOTE FOR RUSSIAN MUSICIAN

Whether you prefer popular jazz, Yiddish klezmer or classical music, Nina Shapilsky can easily handle it.

Of course, that's old news to the many who have already discovered Nina's talents. In 1992, the Danforth Music Hall hosted the production Russians on Broadway, in which Nina was performing. A few weeks into the run, all of the musicians, singers, dancers and behind-the-scenes personnel were abandoned by their Canadian producer and left on the streets without jobs, money or payment. To make matters worse, their return airline tickets to Moscow became invalid when Canada broke off relations with Yugoslavia. Russia would not help them, but when their story went public, City TV and many terrific Torontonians did.

Nina Shapilsky

For Nina Shapilsky, this chapter of the story has a happy ending. While performing in Russians on Broadway, the owner of the Bradgate Arms Hotel invited her to play there part time. When the show collapsed, Nina was able to extend her engagement at the hotel doing what she loves to do!

With her outgoing personality, it's not surprising that Nina learned to speak English quite quickly and began to make many new friends - among them - her husband. Together they have a young child. Nina also became connected to the UJA - funded Community Integration Program, which helped her to display her musical magic in many locations.

Nina Shapilsky is available for private bookings alone, or as part of a duo or trio. You can reach her at (416)866-8504. Tell her she's making a name for herself in T.O. ✸

TEL AVIV — "This is the way I felt when my father died. My whole world has been turned upside down," said a Tel Aviv man, the day after the assassination of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

For many Israelis Rabin was more than a war hero, more than an outstanding statesman, more than just a political leader. He was a father. That word – "abba" in Hebrew – was invoked repeatedly to describe the loss.

Like a father, he offered protection. The strong army Rabin moulded during his years as Chief of Staff gave Israel its stunning victory in the Six Day War.

"Until 1967, we lived with a terrible sense of uncertainty. But in June 1967, Rabin turned us into a strong country. He made us feel safe and confident," recalls Ya'acov, a 40-year-old Tel Avivian. "We knew that someone was looking out for us."

With Rabin's death, that sense of security has been dealt a powerful blow.

One high school student put it more simply: "I no longer feel secure sleeping at night. I feel vulnerable and afraid."

Like a father, Rabin could also disappoint his children. Many Israelis felt that since his election in 1992, he did not deliver on his promise of security. With every terror attack, that feeling intensified. Some blamed him. Some lashed out at him.

As a crowd of mourners gathered outside his Ramat Aviv apartment building on Sunday, his widow Leah Rabin stepped out to greet them: "Where were you," she asked, "when they were standing out here calling him a traitor? Where were you then?"

They didn't answer. Maybe it is only after a father's death that anger and disappointment can give way to a ground swell of love.

Not everyone gathered outside Rabin's home was grieving over the prime minister. One woman stood in a daze outside his apartment building for hours. "I am in shock," said Esty of Rosh Ha'Ayin. "It's not

A time of reckoning

By SHIRA HERZOG
Special to The CJN

Commentary

I am writing these words as dawn is breaking in Israel on the hushed morning after the tragic night that was. So much has already been said, and the words still do not seem to capture the horror, the sorrow, the shock. Nothing in our collective experience in the history of the modern-day State of Israel has prepared us for the tragedy of an assassinated prime minister felled by the hand of one of his own people. It happened to him; it happened to them; it happened to us...

The new faultline created by the assassination of Yitzhak Rabin will run deep in Israeli society. As the gaping wound is open, the internal challenge is enormous. At this moment of reckoning and soul-searching by Israelis and Jews alike, there are two dangers that we should guard against. The first is the danger of generalization, of casting blame on groups and factions for the action of what seems to have been a lone assassin. The second is the danger of marginalization, of dismissing the act as just the aberration of a crazed gunman. Both of

One of us

There are occasions when the mind cannot grasp what the eyes behold; and the heart shatters. Thus were we left speechless, uncomprehending on the cruel Saturday night of Nov. 4, 1995, when Yitzhak Rabin was murdered in Tel Aviv by a young Jew who hated him.

No one who loves Israel, or God, can find excuses for what was done. It was an offence to both God and Israel.

What was once preposterous and unimaginable has now become frighteningly real.

Where have we arrived?

Editorial

Rabin was a Jerusalemite, born on March 1, 1922. Like many of his generation, he was born into a turbulent Jewish Palestine in the first half of this fateful century; his childhood passed quickly into adulthood. By the age of 19, he was fighting in the Haganah and by 25, he was the deputy commander of the Palmach.

He fought in too many wars; led thousands of men into battle, buried many friends and the children of friends, and wept countless times at their graveside. His entire adult life was spent in service to his people. To us and to the Land of Israel he gave of his soul, deeply and totally. How bitter the irony that it was one of us, his own people, who took away his life.

In characteristic Sabra fashion, he was direct in expressing his thoughts and forthright in getting at the nub of an argument. But he was also shy, generally preferring less conversation than more. It was in the almost incidental details of his speeches that he revealed the corners of a humble heart. For example, in the many speeches that he was required to make,

Israel Mourns: Yitzhak Rabin 1922 – 1995

Israelis shaken by the 'enemy within'

[Cont'd. from page 1]

Rabin I'm mourning. It's our country."

That sentiment was echoed in the hand-written placards that appeared at memorial sites all over the country. "What has become of us?" they asked.

Mishka, a 69-year-old Holocaust survivor, made his way on crutches to the Knesset plaza. There he stood looking at Rabin's coffin and shook his head in disbelief.

"To think that a Jew could kill the leader of the Jewish state. I never thought I'd see this – not after the Holocaust. After we waited so long to have our own country ... how can this happen?" he asked, sobbing.

Adina, his Israeli-born wife, also cried, recalling how she had served under Rabin in the Palmach, the pre-state Jewish fighting force. "He was a symbol to us. As the first native-born Israeli prime minister, he was someone who had lived our experiences – a sabra in every sense of the word. Now, I feel as though the earth has opened up beneath me. This isn't the country I knew. This isn't the country I fought for."

For some it was like reliving the trauma of October 1973 when the Yom Kippur War caught an overconfident and unprepared Israel by surprise.

"We were living in an illusion that exploded in our face with the outbreak of the war," recalls Tel Avivian Ittai Eren. "Now once again we discover that we have been living in a world of myths. We thought we were a country with ideals. We thought we would never sink below a certain level. We thought we were different than the Arab world. We were wrong."

For religious Jews, the soul-searching may be even more painful. "Anybody who is religious has to ask: What are people learning in yeshivot and religious schools if they come out with these ideas?" said Mordechai Beck, an Orthodox Jerusalemite.

Candles mark their loss

One widely-held illusion shattered by the killing is that Israel is so different from its Arab neighbors. "We believed that it was only in the Arab world that leaders were killed for making peace," wrote Nachum Barnea in the Hebrew daily Yediot Aharonot.

Labor party member Rona Macabbi laughs bitterly at the irony of this. "We worried about Arafat being assassinated by his own people," she says. "We worried about King Hussein. We didn't see that the enemy was within."

Many Israelis are still too dazed to answer the question: What now? But for some, the path is clearer than ever. The best way to avenge Rabin's murder is to rally behind the peace process that he began, said several mourners.

"We heard you, Yitzhak, and we swear to you that we will continue the Song of Peace, that we will continue to fight for peace," declared the editors of Yediot Aharonot.

Perhaps the most poignant expression of this was the cardboard sign placed outside Rabin's home. "This tune can't be stopped," it read in a reference to the Song of Peace that Rabin sang minutes before he was gunned down at the peace rally on Saturday night.

For others, the answer lies in teaching tolerance. Bar Ilan University, where the killer was studying, announced that it would hold an international symposium on religion and peace to mark the 30th day of mourning for Rabin.

Ashkenazi Chief Rabbi Yisrael Lau urged the public to search their souls to determine if they had contributed in any way to the verbal violence that led to the killing. He called for true unity among the people "so that the sacrifice of Yitzhak will not have been in vain."

But even amidst the calls for unity and tolerance, the sharp divisions in Israeli society could not be blurred. The anger and hatred continued to ooze. Within minutes after Rabin's death was announced, enraged supporters flashed signs calling Likud leader Benjamin Netanyahu a murderer.

Others blamed "Anglo-Saxons" for the killing. "You Anglo-Saxons brought fanaticism to Israel with your Kahane and your crazy settlers," said one middle-aged woman at the memorial outside Rabin's home. "Your rabbis sit in the United States and Canada telling us to hold on to land, while our sons pay the price with their blood. Just get out of our lives," she yelled.

On the other side of the political chasm were those who cheered Rabin's death. At a cultural centre in Ariel, some people broke into applause when they heard that the prime minister had been shot, says Yona Adiel, an actress who appeared at the West Bank settlement on Saturday night.

Tel Aviv taxi driver Amnon Cohen talked of nothing but the assassination with his passengers on Sunday. "You wouldn't believe how many people said that Rabin deserved it," recounted Cohen in disgust.

In Rosh Ha'Ayim, a teacher was suspended after calling Rabin's killer a tzaddik — righteous man.

And in Jerusalem, a young man was beaten up when he asked a group of youths why they were celebrating the slaying.

Many say that an atmosphere of incitement made the murder possible, even inevitable. If the writing was on the wall before the killing, it was still visible afterwards. At the Jerusalem bus station, the walls are plastered with posters announcing next Sunday's memorial to mark the fifth anniversary of the death of Rabbi Meir Kahane. The posters ask forgiveness from Rabbi Kahane for not having heeded his advice to "fight the left."

On the Tel Aviv-Jerusalem highway, a bridge is smeared with blood red letters that spell: "Rabin is a traitor."

And in a tunnel next to the Jerusalem bus station, the walls still display, in ominous black writing, the words that Yigal Amir took to be a call to arms, the words that have changed the history of Israel: "Death to Rabin!"

The Lowest Burial Cost Available from Any Jewish Establishment

When economy is a major consideration, you should know that Hebrew Basic Burial offers the lowest interment costs available from any Jewish establishment. Keeping burial costs low is in no way a negative reflection on either the family or the departed. Families who have used Hebrew Basic Burial's services have all found that dignity and observance of Jewish law were exactly as they should be.

Low cost is just one of many factors which may be involved in arranging a burial that meets a family's emotional and spiritual needs. We welcome inquiries from people who would like to know more about the option of a basic Jewish graveside service and the savings that go with it.

Rabin laid to rest on Jerusalem's Mount Zion

CJN Staff

JERUSALEM — Dignitaries and leaders from around the world gathered on Jerusalem's Mount Herzl to pay their respects to Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin as he was laid to rest with full military honors on Monday.

Acting Prime Minster Shimon Peres, Israeli President Ezer Weizman, U.S. President Bill Clinton, King Hussein of Jordan and Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak were among the leaders who eulogized the slain Israeli prime minister, recalling him as a statesman, visionary and man of peace.

But it was Rabin's granddaughter, Noa Ben Artzi, whose pain, tears and heartfelt farewell moved the assembled dignitaries and those watching on television as she recalled Yitzak Rabin, the man and grandfather.

"Now I wake up to a nightmare. The television does not stop transmitting your pictures. You are still alive and I can almost touch you," she said.

"Grandfather, you were the pillar of fire before the camp and now the camp is in darkness and sadness. I know that people speak in terms of national disaster, but how can you console a whole nation when grandmother does not stop weeping and we only feel the lack of you. Few knew you indeed, though many will speak of you. And I feel that they know nothing of you.

"This is indeed a deep destruction. We the family that stayed behind in the camp without the pillar of fire. Grandfather, you were and still are our own private hero. And I want you to know that everything I did was for you...

"I knew the softness of your eyes' caress, the half smile of yours that always said everything. The smile is no longer there. There is no feeling of revenge in me, for the pain does not allow the space. The ground which has been swept out from underneath us will be the base for our recovery. I am unable to complete what the miserable hand has completed for me and I ask of you that you rest in peace and think of us and miss us too. For we below remain constant in our love towards you. May the God of Israel that keeps over all of us keep you in the heavens ... I am with you forever."

Clinton offered words of consolation for Rabin's widow, Leah, and her family and noted that the slain prime minister's life paralled the life of Israel.

"This son of David and Solomon took up arms to defend Israel's freedom and laid down his life to secure Israel's future."

Pointing to the dignitaries assembled in Jerusalem for the funeral, Clinton pointed out that Rabin again "has brought us together here, in word and deed, for peace. Now it falls to all of us who love peace and all of us who loved him to carry on the struggle for which he gave his life.

"He cleared the path and his spirit continues to light the way. His spirit lives on in the growing peace between Israel and her neighbors. It lives in the eyes of the Jewish and Arab children who are leaving behind a past of fear for a future of hope. It lives on in the promise of true security."

Thousands gathered to honor the slain Israeli leader

Adressing the people of Israel, Clinton urged them not lose their spirit. "Your prime minister was a martyr for peace, but he was a victim of hate. We must learn from his martyrdom that [if] a people can not let go the hatred of their enemies, they risk sowing the seeds of hatred among themselves."

Citing the weekly Torah parshah that dealt with God testing Abraham's faith by commanding him to sacrifice his son Yitzkak, Clinton said "now God tests our faith even

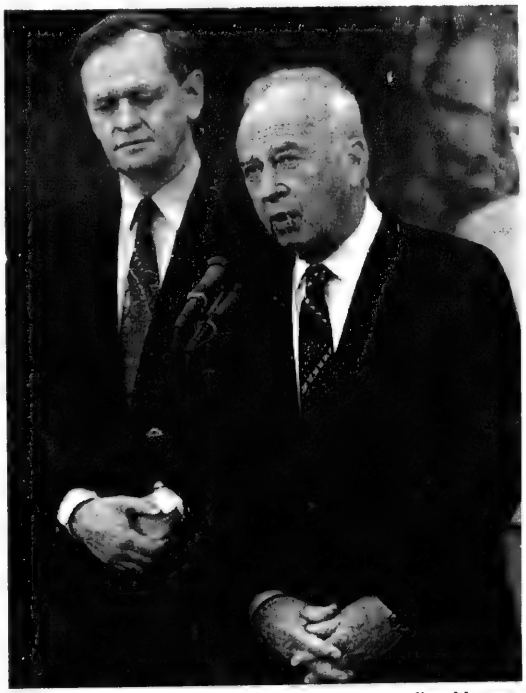
Israel Mourns: Yitzhak Rabin 1922 - 1995

Jean Chretien's remarks

The following is the statement delivered to reporters by Prime Minister Jean Chretien:



Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's visit to Ottawa earlier this year.

Ladies and gentlemen, mesdames et messieurs. I speak to you this evening with a heavy heart. The world has lost a great man, who dedicated his life to the service of his country, and peace and reconciliation. On behalf of all Canadians I want to express my deep shock and outrage at this assassination.

My own relationship with him was very special. He was the first leader I welcomed to Canada after I became Prime Minister two years ago today. Earlier this year I met him again and two weeks ago I stood sometimes with him in New York. And he was full of hope. He was telling me that it was the 50th anniversary of the United Nations, and he was in New York with King Hussein and Arafat, and they were working for peace. And he saw the lasting peace coming up for the people living in the Middle East.

He was a great man, and the best tribute that we can pay to Mr. Rabin will be to have a lasting peace in the Middle East.

I would like to offer to his family and his people in Israel, you know, the condolence of all the people of Canada and the government. They've lost really a great man, and it's terrible, but we have to carry on working for peace. And there will always be, I hope, people who will be like Mr. Rabin, giving his life for peace and the betterment of his countrymen and women.

My dear friends, it's incredible what you can feel at a time like this. The world has lost one of its great leaders, someone who gave his life in Israel for the public good. A person who had only one thing in mind, to bring together people who are living together in the Middle East so that they could shake hands and live in peace. I think that one of the greatest moments we have lived over the past few years happened during his visit to Washington when he shook hands with Mr. Arafat. It was one of the great moments in history.

And I had the pleasure of meeting him barely two weeks ago in New York City, and he was full of confidence, full of hope. He believed sincerely that there was a light at the end of the tunnel. He told me, I've come here to the United Nations with King Hussein, with Mr. Arafat, and all three of us feel the same thing. We feel that peace is possible.

And he felt that this was a very good way to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the United Nations, because the UN had played such an important role in his country.

So for us as Canadians, it is time to express to his family, to Mr. Rabin's family and also to all the citizens of that country, that country that is so important to many Canadians, we express our sincerest sympathies.

The best thing we can do to commemorate this great man who gave his entire life, who worked in the interests of the public good throughout his entire life, the best thing we can do is continue working to establish peace in this troubled part of the world.

I would like to offer to Mr. Rabin's family and to the population of Israel our sincerest condolences.

Tributes pour in

Embassy of Israel

OTTAWA — The Embassy of Israel is greatly saddened by the tragic death of the Prime Minister of Israel, Mr. Yitzhak Rabin.

A condolence book [was] open at the embassy, at 50 O'Connor St., Suite 1005 on Monday, Nov. 6 and Tuesday, Nov. 7.

A memorial service [was] held on Monday, Nov. 6 at Congregation Beth Shalom, 151 Chapel St.

Canadian Jewish Congress

MONTREAL — Canadian Jewish Congress has expressed shock and horror over the assassination of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

This is a terrible tragedy and we are in shock," stated Congress President Goldie Hershon. "We extend our deepest sympathy to the wife and family of Prime Minister Rabin and to the people of Israel. Yitzhak Rabin was a man of honor whose strongest wish was to bring peace to the Middle East. We condemn this despicable act of murder in the strongest terms. This is a crime against Israel's democracy.

"We support the democratically elected government of Israel and we know the people of Israel will overcome this terrible tragedy and remain united in a common purpose. The peace process has always been, and will continue to be, in the hands of the people of Israel and its government. It will not be determined by murderers.

"Our focus now is on peace within Israel. The State of Israel is strong — its people are brave, and our Jewish community here in Canada and all over the world stands in solidarity with them now, as always. We are a family in mourning."

Canada-Israel Committee

OTTAWA — Stephen Victor, national chair of the Canada-Israel Committee, expressed shock and extreme sorrow over Saturday's assassination of Israeli Prime Minister, Yitzhak Rabin.

"We are outraged by the death of Mr. Rabin, a man who had devoted his entire life to the State of Israel and the Jewish people. As a soldier, Yitzhak Rabin fought to defend the State of Israel against its enemies, and as prime minister, he struggled to achieve peace with security for his nation. His death is a loss not just for Israel, but to all those in the Middle East — and indeed, throughout the world — who seek a path of peace and reconciliation," Victor said in a statement.

"All people of goodwill are united in condemnation of this senseless act.

"While we are horrified and profoundly grieve this tragedy, we must trust that the pursuit of peace for which Yitzhak Rabin fought so diligently and ultimately sacrificed his life will proceed and will not succumb to political extremism. His wishes and courage will live on."

Dignitaries attend funeral

The following leaders of Canadian Jewish organizations accompanied Prime Minister Jean Chretien to the funeral of Yitzhak Rabin:

Goldie Herson (Canadian Jewish Congress); Brian Morris (B'nai Brith Canada); Stephen Victor (Canada-Israel Committee); Rabbi Dow Marmur (Canadian Zionist Federation); and Harvey Wolfe (United Israel Appeal).

More than 40 past and present world leaders attended the funeral, including:

U.S. President Bill Clinton; former presidents Jimmy Carter and George Bush; Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak; Jordan's King Hussein; Morocco's King Hassan; British Prime Minister John Major; Prince Charles; French President Jacques Chirac; German Chancellor Helmut Kohl and German President Roman Herzog; U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher and former secretaries of state George Shultz, James Baker and Henry Kissinger; Russian Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin; Georgian leader Eduard Shevardnadze; UN Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali; Swedish Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson and Danish Prime Minister Poul Nyrup Rasmussen.

Israel Mourns: Yitzhak Rabin 1922 – 1995

Grieving for a tragic loss

B'nai Brith Canada

TORONTO — "Yitzhak Rabin was a visionary who took chances for peace. His legacy will be reflected in Jewish history for all eternity," said Frank Dimant, executive vice-president of B'nai Brith Canada, in a statement.

B'nai Brith Canada, together with all major Jewish organizations, was represented at the funeral of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin. Brian Morris, national president, was part of a delegation headed by Prime Minister Jean Chretien.

All national Jewish organizations called for Nov. 6 as a day of mourning, out of respect to the memory of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, hero in the 1967 war and a man who paid the ultimate price to ensure peace for the State of Israel.

Consulate of Israel

TORONTO — It is with the deepest sorrow and grief that the Consulte General of Israel in Toronto announces the death of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, victim of an atrocious attack.

Mr. Rabin dedicated himself to achieving peace and security for the people of Israel and he lost his life in the pursuit of this noble cause.

To enable the public to express its condolences to the State of Israel and its people, a book of condolences [was] placed in the offices of the consulate general of Israel in Toronto. The signing of the book [took] place on Monday, Nov. 6 and Tuesday, Nov. 7.

Charles Bronfman

MONTREAL — Andy and I, as are all civilized people, are aghast at this senseless and heinous act. We mourn the loss of Yitzhak Rabin, a giant among men. Our prayers and thoughts are with his wife Leah and their loved ones.

Our sages teach that life overcomes death. Indeed, one of the great tenets of Judaism is the value that we place upon life and living. Thus, how one Jew would knowingly murder his prime minister is beyond comprehension.

We pray that at this tragic time in the history of our people, Jewish leaders in Israel and throughout the world will find the courage and strength to renew our mission.

It is in that spirit and in the memory of Yitzhak Rabin that we must rededicate ourselves to the Jewish concepts of peace, brotherhood and tikkun olam.

Herut-Likud

TORONTO — From a state of deep shock and profound grief, World Jewry is attempting to come to terms with the loss of the prime minister of Israel, Yitzhak Rabin. Beyond this we are attempting to come to terms with the deep division in the community that in some way led to Rabin's assassination. I feel that at no time in our history, have we needed more to obfuscate our political differences and unite in our sorrow. We must reflect on our common values and our shared tenets of Zionism, to which Rabin devoted his life. While plurality, debate and difference are essential to democratic process, taken to the extreme, they threaten the very fabric of democracy.

Violence and democracy, violence and Zionism and violence within the Jewish people has and must again become unknown. That we peacefully debate our collective future and celebrate our diversity, respecting our differences must be retrieved and protected.

This week has seen a tremendous loss to the Jewish community in more ways than one, but it does not have to end this way.

Talia Klein
Spokesperson
Herut-Likud Betar/Tagar
Toronto

Barry Campbell, MP

OTTAWA — Mr. Rabin often said that it took more courage to make peace with one's enemies than to fight them. His tragic death must not end the search for peace. His legacy must be a renewed commitment for peace. I join with all Canadians and people around the world in expressing my deep sorrow to the people of Israel. The world has lost a great man.

Canadian Friends of Yesha

TORONTO — Larry Zeifman, co-chair of One Israel/Canadian Friends Of Yesha, expressed shock and outrage in condemning the brutal assassination of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

"Together with the Rabin family, the citizens of Israel and Jews worldwide, we mourn this tragic loss and will remember Yitzhak Rabin as a true patriot of Israel.

"At this difficult moment in the history of the Jewish State, we are united in our support of the democratic process in Israel and our unconditional condemnation of violence.

"We extend our heartfelt condolences to Mrs. Leah Rabin and the entire Rabin family."

Palestine House

TORONTO — The news of the assassination of the prime minister of Israel has shocked all peoples and individuals of passion and consiousness, including the Palestinian community.

Mr. Rabin, who led the Israeli army on many occasions to expand and secure the physical existence of the State of Israel, was courageous enough to admit that security to his people could only be achieved by recognizing the rights of Palestinians and Israelis to live,

Sunday, November 26, 1995 at The Sheraton Centre, Toronto

Reception: 5:00 p.m. Dinner: 6:00 p.m.

Tickets to the Dinner are $107 per person with a minimum contribution of $360 (for which a tax receipt will be issued)

Campaign and Dinner Co-Chairs:
Sheila Engel and Jack Gwartz

A special project will be initiated on the occasion of the Negev Dinner in tribute to Leslie L. Dan, to be known as THE DAN FAMILY ARAVA DEVELOPMENT PROJECT, dedicated to the loving memory of the late Judith Dan.

The reclamation project to be undertaken in the Arava, a barren and wilderness area of the eastern Negev Desert, running south from the Dead Sea down along the border with Jordan to Eilat, will transform a very old dream into a new reality. Fertile agricultural land supporting an enhanced population base and light industry will blossom forth. For JNF, this is a long-time wish, a "back to the basics" Zionist approach to making the Negev "green" and productive. A rejuvenated Arava!

With the support of the Toronto community, JNF will act to realize the vision of the prophet: "And the desert will become a paradise and the wilderness a garden of the Lord."

'A day of darkness for the Jewish people' govern and determine their future side by side, without wars and oppression.

While millions of peace-loving humans mourn the senseless killing of a brave Israeli peace leader, we hope that security forces, Palestinian and Israeli, will be on full alert to prevent violent actions aimed at stalling and derailing the peace process.

Palestine House, on behalf of the Palestinian community, joins all civilized people in condemning the killer. We also wish to offer our condolences to the prime minister's family, all Israelis and the Canadian Jewish community.

Bar-Ilan University

RAMAT-GAN — The president of Bar-Ilan University, Prof. Shlomo Eckstein, expressed deep shock, absolute horror and utter condemnation for the murder of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

"Murder is simply the most un-Jewish act imaginable. It runs contrary to everything that Bar-Ilan University stands for: tolerance, moderation and morality. For 40 years, this university has sought to bridge the gap in Israel between religious and secular, Ashkenazi and Sephardi, and all sectors of the Israeli public. It is simply unbelievable that a student of this university could be involved in such an abominable, horrific and destructive act."

Rabin received an honorary doctorate from Bar-Ilan in 1993. At that time, the university expressed its appreciation and admiration for his drive to bring peace between Israel and its neighbors.

Prof. Eckstein called upon the Israeli nation to behave with restraint and wisdom in this time of great tragedy. "Bar-Ilan will continue to promote tolerance and diversity, respect for tradition and deep love of all fellow Jews and Israelis in Israel and around the world. What has happened must never happen again."

Coalition for Jewish Concerns/Amcha

NEW YORK — Rabbi Avi Weiss, president of the 15,000-member U.S. grassroots activist group, the Coalition for Jewish Concerns/Amcha, spoke of the need for soul-searching on the part of all Jews, at an emotional memorial vigil for slain Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

After a solemn recitation of Psalms, Rabbi Weiss, addressing the hundreds of people who packed the sanctuary of his congregation at the Hebrew Institute of Riverdale in New York, noted:

"This is a day of deep darkness for the Jewish people. I say this as one who has opposed this peace process. But what has occurred transcends politics. It is up to every Jew, whatever your political or religious bent, to dig deep into one's soul and to find the love to stamp out the hatred which has engulfed Israeli society. If a Jew can lift a gun to murder the prime minister of the State of Israel, it means we are a hairbreath from that moment when Jews en masse can lift up guns against other Jews in a civil war. What then will have happened to the Zionist dream?"

Israel Mourns: Yitzhak Rabin 1922 – 1995

From Yitzhak Rabin's speeches: insight into his aspirations

"The nation was exalted and many wept when they heard of the capture of the Old City. Our sabra youth, and certainly our soldiers, have no taste for sentimentality and shrink from any public show of emotion. In this instance, however, the strain of battle, and the anxiety which preceded it joined with the sense of deliverance, the sense of standing at the very heart of Jewish history, to break the shell of hardness and diffidence, stirring up springs of feeling and spiritual discovery. The paratroopers who conquered the Wall leaned on its stones and wept. It was an act which in its symbolic meaning can have few parallels in the history of nations. We in the army are not in the habit of speaking in high-flown language, but the revelation of that hour at the Temple Mount, a profound truth manifesting itself as if by lightening, overpowered customary constraints.

All these things have their origin in the spirit and their end in the spirit. Our soldiers prevailed not by the strength of their weapons but by their sense of mission, by their consciousness of the justice of their cause, by a deep love of their country, and by their understanding of the heavy task laid upon them: to ensure the existence of our people in their homeland, and to affirm even at the cost of their lives, the right of the Jewish people to live its life in its own state, free, independent, and in peace.

The army which I had the privilege of commanding through this war came from the people and returns to the people: a people which rises above itself in times of crisis, and prevails over all enemies in the hour of trial by its moral and spiritual strength."

(Excerpted from an address on Mount Scopus, June 28, 1967, upon receiving an honorary doctorate from Hebrew University in recognition of his and the IDF's services to the nation.)

" Alongside the great advantages, the anticipated peace -- great risks also lie hidden. Our eyes are not so blurred that we do not see the risks, and we will do everything necessary in order to reduce these to a minimum.

At the same time, we believe that the risks are calculated and that they will not pose a threat to the security or existence of the State of Israel. In any event, the strength of the IDF, the best army in the world, stands at our disposal, if and when we should be tested, God forbid.

Our gaze is today turned toward the good opportunities; toward days without fear and nights without trepidation; toward a growing economy and a society that wants for nothing. If and when the peace which we so desire will arrive, our lives will be completely transformed. We will no longer live by the sword alone."

(From his address to the Knesset, September 1993, in the debate on the ratification of Oslo 1)

"I appeal now to the Palestinian people and say: our Palestinian neighbors. One hundred years of bloodshed implanted in us hostility towards one another. For one hundred years we lay in wait for you, and you lay in wait for us. We killed you, and you killed us. Thousands of our graves, thousands of your graves covering the hills and valleys are painful milestones in your history and ours.

Today, you and I stretch out our hands in peace. Today we are beginning a different reckoning."

(From the signing ceremony of the Gaza-Jericho Accord, Cairo, May 4, 1994)

"There comes a time when there is a need to be strong, and to make courageous decisions to overcome the minefields between our two peoples. We have known many days of sorrow. You have known many days of grief. But bereavement unites us, as does bravery.

We honor those who sacrificed their lives. We both must draw on the springs of our great spiritual resources to forgive the anguish we caused to each other, to clear the minefields that divided us for so many years and to supplant it with fields of plenty.

For nearly two generations, desolation pervaded the heart of our two peoples. The time has now come not merely to dream of a better future, but to realize it."

(From the ceremony at the signing of the peace treaty with Jordan, October 26, 1994, in the Arava Desert.)

"I stand here not alone today, on this small rostrum in Oslo. I am here to speak in the name of generations of Israelis and Jews, of the shepherds of Israel, and you know that King David was a shepherd...

I am here to speak in the name of the poets and of those who dreamed of an end to war...

And I am the emissary of millions who perished in the Holocaust...

I stand here mainly for the generations to come, so that we may all be deemed worthy of the medal which you have bestowed on me and my colleagues today.

I stand here as the emissary, if they will allow me, of our neighbors who were our enemies.

I stand here as the emissary of the soaring hopes of a people which has endured the worst that history has to offer and nevertheless made its mark, not just on the chronicles of the Jewish people but on all mankind."

(From the ceremony accepting the Nobel Peace Prize, Oslo, Norway, Dec. 10, 1994)

"The sight you see before you at this moment was impossible, was unthinkable just two years ago. Only poets dreamed of it. And to our great pain, soldiers and civilians went to their death to make this moment possible. Here we stand before you, men who fate and history have sent on a mission of peace to end once and for all 100 years of bloodshed."

(From the signing ceremony of the Oslo 2 agreement, Sept. 29, 1994, in Washington.)

"Many ideologies and revolutions have failed and faded away. But it is Zionism that brought the Jewish people to its historic homeland. Zionism won."

(From the speech to the UN General Assembly, October 1995)

His last public words...

Permit me to say that I am deeply moved. I wish to thank each and everyone of you, who have come here today to take a stand against violence and for peace. This government, which I am privileged to head, together with my friend Shimon Peres, decided to give peace a chance -- a peace that will solve most of Israel's problems.

I was a military man for 27 years. I fought as long as there was no chance for peace. I believe that there is now a chance for peace, a great chance.

We must take advantage of it for the sake of those standing here, and for those who are not here -- and they are many.

I have always believed that the majority of the people want peace and are ready to take risks for peace. In coming here today, you demonstrate, together with many others who did not come, that the people truly desire peace and oppose violence. Violence erodes the basis of Israeli democracy.

It must be condemned and isolated. This is not the way of the State of Israel. In a democracy there can be differences, but the final decision will be taken in democratic elections, as the 1992 elections which gave us the mandate to do what we are doing, and to continue on this course.

Yitzhak Rabin

I want to say that I am proud of the fact that representatives of the countries with whom we are living in peace are present with us here, and will continue to be here: Egypt, Jordan and Morocco, which opened the road to peace for us. I want to thank the president of Egypt, the king of Jordan and the king of Morocco, represented here today, for their partnership with us in our march towards peace.

But, more than anything, in the more than three years of this government's existence, the Israeli people has proven that it is possible to make peace, that peace opens the door to a better economy and society; that peace is not just a prayer. Peace is first of all in our prayers, but it is also the aspiration of the Jewish people, a genuine aspiration for peace.

There are enemies of peace who are trying to hurt us, in order to torpedo the peace process. I want to say bluntly, that we have found a partner for peace among the Palestinians as well: the PLO, which was an enemy, and has ceased to engage in terrorism. Without partners for peace, there can be no peace. We will demand that they do their part for peace, just as we will do our part for peace, in order to solve the most complicated, prolonged, and emotionally charged aspect of the Israeli-Arab conflict: the Palestinian-Israeli conflict.

This is a course which is fraught with difficulties and pain. For Israel, there is no path that is without pain. But the path of peace is preferable to the path of war. I say this to you as one who was a military man, someone who is today minister of defence and sees the pain of the families of the IDF soldiers. For them, for our children, in my case for our grandchildren, I want this government to exhaust every opening, every possibility, to promote and achieve a comprehensive peace. Even with Syria, it will be possible to make peace.

This rally must send a message to the Israeli people, to the Jewish people around the world, to the many people in the Arab world, and indeed to the entire world, that the Israeli people want peace, support peace. For this, I thank you.

Israel Mourns: Yitzhak Rabin 1922 – 1995

Son, husband, soldier, peacemaker...

Yitzhak Rabin was born in Jerusalem on March 1, 1922. He graduated from the Kadoorie Agricultural School. Inducted into the Haganah by Moshe Dayan, he participated in the Palmach's operation in Syria in 1941. He was promoted to platoon leader, and in 1945 was deputy commander of the operation that freed 200 illegal immigrants from the Atlit detention camp.

In June of the next year, he was arrested by the British, along with hundreds of Jewish leaders, in what came to be known as "Black Saturday," and was sent to the British detention camp at Rafah for six months.

In October 1947, Rabin was appointed deputy commander of the Palmach, serving directly under Allon. In the spring of 1948, he commanded the Harel Brigade, leading them in Operation Nahshon to open the road to besieged Jerusalem and liberating the Katamon and Sheikh Jarrah neighborhoods of the city.

Under Allon's command, Rabin took part in the battles for Lod and Ramle, and as chief of operations on the southern front, led Operation Horev, the counter-offensive which took control of the Negev and Eilat. He was a member of the delegation that signed the armistice agreements with the Arab states at Rhodes in 1949.

Rabin graduated from the Staff College in Britain in 1953. From 1954 to 1956, he was head of the Training Branch and was promoted to brigadier general.

He served as OC Northern Command from 1956 to 1959 and as Chief of Operations from 1959 to 1960, and in 1961 was appointed deputy chief of staff. He became the seventh IDF chief of staff on Jan. 1, 1964.

As chief of staff, Rabin led the IDF to victory in the Six Day War.

He retired from the army on Jan. 1, 1968, and was named ambassador to the United States, where he served for five years.

In the spring of 1973, Rabin returned to Israel and became active in the Labor party. He was elected a member of the Knesset in December 1973, and when Golda Meir formed her government in April 1974, he was appointed minister of labor.

Following the resignation of Golda Meir on June 2, 1974, the Knesset expressed confidence in a new government headed by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

During Rabin's premiership, the government placed special emphasis on strengthening the economy, solving social problems and reinforcing the IDF. With American mediation, disengagement agreements were signed with Egypt and Syria (1974), followed by an interim agreement with Egypt in 1975. Later in 1975, the first Memorandum of Understanding was signed between the governments of Israel and the United States. In June 1976, Rabin's government issued the order for "Operation Entebbe," liberating the hijacked Air France passengers.

Rabin resigned from the premiership in April 1977.

Following the May 1977 elections and until the formation of the National Unity Government in September 1984, Rabin served as a Knesset member of the Labor party in opposition and was a member of the Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee.

In the National Unity Governments (1984-90), Yitzhak Rabin served as minister of defence. In January 1985, he presented the proposal for the withdrawal of IDF forces from Lebanon and the establishment of a security zone to guarantee peace to the settlements along Israel's northern border.

Yitzhak Rabin was elected chair of the Israel Labor party in its first nationwide primaries conducted in February 1992, and led the party to victory in the June 1992 Knesset elections. In July 1992, Rabin formed Israel's 25th government as prime minister and minister of defence.

His premiership was marked by the following landmarks in the peace process:

On Sept. 13, 1993, at the signing of the Israeli-Palestinian Declaration of Principles on the White House lawn, Rabin shook hands with PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat.

On Oct. 26, 1994, on the Israel-Jordan border, he signed the Treaty of Peace between the State of Israel and the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan.

On Sept. 28, 1995, he was a signatory to the Israeli-Palestinian Interim Agreement on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

Rabin was awarded the Nobel Prize for Peace in December 1994, along with Foreign Minister Shimon Peres and PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat.

Yitzhak Rabin was assassinated on Nov. 4, 1995, shortly after speaking at a peace rally in Tel Aviv's Malchei Yisrael square. He is survived by his sister Rachel, his wife Leah, two children, Dalia and Yuval, and three grandchildren.

(Excerpts from the speech Prime Minister Rabin delivered moments before he was killed.)

he often referred to poets and dreamers. The reference undoubtedly resonated with his own inner stirrings.

These are the words he used to describe his feelings when Anwar al-Sadat first visited Israel: "But when President Sadat appeared in the doorway and moved out to the top of the steps, our emotion peaked in a way I hadn't thought possible. It was a uniquely electric moment for us all; one of those moments that remain etched in your memory forever; the kind that people call upon to date a generation. Yet for me, that 'moment' seemed to stretch on and on ... I felt that I was caught up in a dream. Despite the evidence of my own eyes and ears, what was happening around me seemed quite unbelievable."

The "electric moment" of which Rabin spoke would eventually reshape his thinking. And the dream in which he was caught up was the dream of peace. He speculated about the possibility and nature of peace in the Middle East. True to form, his speculations were always candid and unburnished. In sad retrospect, they seem almost prophetic.

Almost 20 years ago, he wrote: "In the past we devoted too little time and attention to the challenge of living in the Middle East, as a Jewish state, in peace. Now the spectre of Israel losing her way because of the blessing of peace should not be ignored. For all that, however, I must say that as a man who has led his country's struggle both on the battlefield and in political negotiations, who has been privileged to amass a unique combination of experience as a soldier, a diplomat, and a head of government, there is no doubt whatsoever in my mind that the risks of peace are preferable by far to the grim certainties that await every nation in war."

After Nov. 4, 1995, these words hang in the air.

There is no doubt Rabin was reluctant to touch, let alone, shake, the hand that was extended towards him two years ago on the front lawn of the White House in Washington. But, just as experienced generals know instinctively when the pre-battle tension must be broken with the command to start engines, or when the battle must be joined despite the bone-wearying fatigue of their soldiers, or when the outcome of the battle is finally assured despite the loss of life, Rabin knew instinctively, deep in his heart, he had to respond, to seize the initiative, to grasp the hand reaching toward him.

He knew the battle had changed. His people, so courageous in war, must now test their courage in peace.

Two weeks after the Six Day War, in a speech on Mount Scopus accepting the nation's gratitude to the IDF, chief of staff Rabin spoke of the spiritual and moral dimension of the IDF and of the nation from which it sprang. He described the Jewish people as "a people which rises above itself in times of crisis and prevails over all enemies in the hour of trial by its moral and spiritual strength".

Alas, we are now in a time of crisis. Unbelievably, we seem to have "lost our way". We may even have become our own enemies.

Let us all remember that this calculated murder was committed by an individual. It was not committed by one of "them" – settlers, religious, or right-wing. It was committed by one of "us," one of the Jewish people.

For the sake of heaven, the people and the Land, we must "rise above ourselves." By all turns and at all costs, we must resist hatred.

When the bullets fired by that young hateful Jew slammed into the prime minister's body, they also shattered the hearts of all decent, peace-loving and truly God-fearing people.

We mourn the life of Yitzhak Rabin that was taken from the Jewish people and from the world. May his memory now be for blessing.

Deplores Parizeau's comments on ethnic vote

When Jacques Parizeau spoke on the night of Oct. 30, he stated that the Yes side lost out to "the money" and the "ethnic" vote. Where do the Jews fit in the mind of the premier? Probably in both spots. Take your pick.

But Mr. Parizeau is right. The separatists will have their country. They will not be denied. And it will be soon — when all those "ethnics" and "the money" exit la belle province because they feel so unwelcome in their own home. The separatists can have their own racist little isolated country.

Mr. Parizeau is a disgrace. He doesn't deserve a Canadian passport. So next time, our strategy changes. Let's not do anything to force him and his followers to stay. We'll survive just fine.

Marshall Garnick
Toronto

Danger of a separate Quebec

Québécois be wary. In the midst of the separatist debate, some have failed to consider the ramifications of a Yes vote on the rights of the citizens of the province, particularly minority rights. In the wake of Lucien Bouchard's comments regarding the Québécois as a "white race," the question must be raised as to the future of democracy and freedom within Quebec.

Although any separatist would certainly deny this hypothesis, it seems that individual rights in a separate Quebec would be threatened. One needs only to look back as recently as the past several decades to prove this.

Remember Quebec's language laws, Bill 101 and other subsequent laws regarding the language of business and education in the province. Bound within the constraints of the Canadian Constitution, subject to the immediate reaction of the federal government and the other provinces, the Quebec government has still seen fit to limit such fundamental rights as that of speech in order to preserve the French language.

So what lies ahead in a separate Quebec, one that is not bound by these constraints? While it is true that Quebec would most certainly develop its own constitution to safeguard the rights of its people, that constitution would be drafted by the very people who would necessarily have to override personal rights and freedoms to preserve the very reason that they separated from Canada in the first place.

I wish this not to be a threat or groundless accusation, for simple inferences and logic will lead to this conclusion: In order to pursue the reasons for separation, an independent Quebec must "tax" the rights of its citizens. This warning is not just for the Jews within the province, but for all groups who do not fit the stereotypical view of a Québécois.

Thanks from family who faced deportation

If you recall, we are a Jewish family: father, mother and two daughters from Ossetia (Caucasus, former USSR). Our refugee claim had been denied and our deportation back to the ongoing war zone became a severe reality. However, thanks to the efforts of Canadians like you, we were finally allowed to stay in Canada. Recently we were granted permanent resident status. We consider this a great triumph of the Canadian democratic system. Without your generous support it would have been impossible.

We would like to express our special thanks to Susan Davis, national executive director of Jewish Immigrant Aid Services (JIAS); Perry Romberg, executive director, Toronto office of JIAS; Etta Kanevsky, our case worker; Pauline Swartsman, receptionist and notary public; Ella Boroda; and all the staff of JIAS. Their support was and still is invaluable.

Also, we would like to express our thanks to Joseph Volpe, MP, Eglinton-Lawrence; George Berger, executive assistant of Coun. Norman Gardner; George Zegarac, manager, Ministry of the Environment and Energy; Bruce Cameron, principal, W. L. Mackenzie Collegiate Institute; Christina Kurata, barrister and solicitor; Lynn Horton, coordinator, Amnesty Intertnational; and Regina Kempinsky of Toronto for their boundless kindness and support.

Do away with lavish tribute dinners

Given the current economic climate and the cutbacks to Social Services programs, why not stop having lavish fundraising or tribute dinners? If groups want to raise money for charity or to honor an individual, why do so with a meal that might cost close to $90, the amount that those on Social Assistance are supposed to spend per month on food? Surely we can be creative in finding other ways to raise money or celebrate and send the cost of the food not eaten to those who need it.

Remembering Shlomo

(Rabbi Shlomo Carlebach died last year on the 11th of November, the 16th day of Cheshvan. In his memory and in his honor, we are featuring an essay in two parts by Neila Carlebach about him and his legacy. The second part will appear next week.)

By NEILA CARLEBACH

Rabbi Shlomo Carlebach passed to the next world one year ago.

G-d gave us Shabbat and Yom Tov to give us a taste of Gan Eden, of what it is to be infinite in this world. G-d gave us Shlomo to guide us there.

Being with Shlomo was to taste the Divine. Through his niggunim, his warm smile and incredible all-encompassing love, his Torah and his contagious simchah, he uplifted our whole generation and gently moved us to that place where there is no time, no concern or heartache. His great light has passed from among us. I mourn the loss, for being without Shlomo is also timeless, a drifting between heaven, remembering his sweetness, and hell, facing that he is no longer here.

In chassidut, when a tzaddik leaves the world, the sparks of his neshamah expand and give even greater light to the people he touched. Shlomo's sparks are everywhere. The stories continue ... how he saved this life, how he called at the right minute, how his songs gave hope, how this one met his wife because of Shlomo, how so many are practising Yidden because he made Yiddishkeit so beautiful and so alive. So many souls in this world are celebrating that Shlomo Carlebach existed and that they shared in the blessing of knowing him. I thank G-d to be among them.

People who knew Shlomo well were very aware that although Sholomo moved like a whirlwind, he was very focussed and his purpose in the world was well defined.

Not only did he have a mission but he had messages to impart while doing his avodah, his holy work. He was a man obsessed when it came to learning, giving over Torah, bringing Yidden back to their roots, being a friend to those in need and bringing his own special brands of celebration everywhere he could. Shlomo never missed an opportunity to sing, dance and tell stories. Now I celebrate Shlomo and his stories, which were as unique as he was, and in the telling I feel his closeness.

After the Holocaust, world Jewry was anesthetized by the horrors of the war. There remained little joy or spirit in prayer or in life. Like the Baal Shem Tov, who founded chassidut at another dark period in Jewish history, Shlomo believed that every Jew had to be filled with joy knowing that there was one G-d in the world, that each one of us is a child of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and that we stood on Mt. Sinai.

"Gevalt!" he would yell. "Even when you are heartbroken, you have to be b'simchah, joyful." So when Shlomo took up a guitar in the late 1950s, cut a record in the back room of the B'nei Akiva in Manhattan, became the first religious Jew in show business, he did so with a single-mindedness that never changed. In fact, his fervor to reach Jews all over the world grew.

Shlomo was well equipped with teachings. From his father, Rabbi Naftali Hardwig Carlebach, the chief rabbi of Baden near Vienna, he learned to love and respect every human being. Like Reb Nachman of Bratslav, he believed that a Jew should never give up. Like Reb Kloynimous Kalman, the rabbi of children who perished in the Holocaust, he embodied the teaching, "The greatest thing in the world is to do someone else a favor."

Shloime, as he referred to himself, was born in Berlin in 1925, a grandchild of two rabbinical dynasties, with yichus that extended back to the Bach, the Taas, the Maharal of Prague and through 18 distinct lines to David HaMelech. He said that his earliest memories were from the age of three, when he was told he would be a rabbi and therefore had to behave in certain ways. He remembered that his twin brother Eli Chaim cried when Shlomo refused to wear a yarmulke. According to his parents, he wouldn't be able to be a rabbi. He took his brother's tears to heart and succumbed to his fate.

At the age of five, he and his brother started learning with a rabbi who came to live with them. So hungry was Shlomo to learn, that after he was put to bed at 8 p.m., he would wait for quiet then sneak upstairs to learn with his rebbe till 11 p.m. Shlomo's thirst for knowledge also led him to devour every secular book in his father's vast library. By the time he was bar mitzvah, he had not only read all the European philosophers, novelists and most classical literature, but also concluded that compared to the Torah and the Talmud, they were very shvach, weak, and that Torah offered not only a greater depth of learning, but the secrets of life and creation as well.

Shlomo Carlebach's soul was enveloped in song

Shlomo's older sister Shulamith often spoke of his generosity of nature and kindness even when he was young. She related that as a young girl she wasn't allowed to bike-ride to school and that it took her well over an hour to walk. So with Shlomo's help she found the solution. She would quietly leave with his bike every morning before her mother was up and Shlomo would meet her every day after her classes at some distance from their home so she could walk through the gate while he rode the bicycle home as if after a ride. This routine lasted for years and he never tired of doing his sister this favor.

Shlomo's father, a misnagid, was a combination of all the qualities that great rebbunim were said to possess. He was a great scholar, a lover of all humanity and he practised chesed, loving kindness, as an integral part of his life. Shlomo recalled that there were two doors downstairs, one for people to enter and one for them to leave, and there was a constant flow between the two.

Once a rabbi came to visit his father and while he was waiting with Shlomo for Reb Naftali, a poor man entered and mistook the visiting rabbi for Shlomo's father. After he told his sad story about his sick wife, many children, little finances and depression, the rabbi asked him frankly whether he kept Shabbat and said blessings. He then admonished him saying his bad lot was because he was so delinquent in keeping G-d's laws and dismissed him. As he was leaving, Reb Naftali entered, greeted the confused man warmly, refused to talk till he had tea and cake and then listened as the man repeated his tale of woe. Shlomo was amazed to see tears flowing down his father's face as he offered solace to the poor man. By the time he left, a woman had been hired to help his wife, he had been given an ample sum of money and was invited to return the following week to speak once again to the rabbi. Shlomo added with pride that his father's love eventually brought this man and his family to be shomer Shabbat members of his shul. Shlomo said that this occurrence burned into his heart the way Jews should treat others.

Shlomo said of his father, "He implanted Yiddishkeit in the hearts of thousands of people, with a smile, with a handshake, with his words, with a light which emanated from his soul. Those who met him will never forget him. Those whom he touched had the strength to remain Jews even when their world fell apart and was destroyed."

Shlomo could have said these very words of himself — his generosity of spirit and compassion were known worldwide.

It wasn't just poor Yidden that found their way to the Carlebach family in Baden. Rabbi Carlebach also was friends with the Cardinal of Vienna, the great rabbis from Ponivosh and Telz, chassidic leaders like the Tchortkover and the Boyaner and the intelligentsia of Europe. By example, he taught his children to respect all of G-d's creation without prejudice. When the old Lubavitcher rabbi came to Baden to be treated for paralysis from his days of exile in Siberia, Reb Naftali took his sons to him for a brachah. He prophetically blessed them to grow up as chassidic Jews not German Jews.

Every Jewish person who escaped the Holocaust was a miracle, as was the entire Carlebach family. Having left on the last ship in 1939, the Carlebachs settled in Crown Heights, N.Y., where Reb Naftali became the rabbi of the Young Israel. Shlomo attended Mesivta Torah Vadas and studied with Reb Shlomo Hyman, whom Shlomo said was the deepest of the deep. After Reb Aaron Cotler gave a shiur, a lecture, at his yeshivah, Shlomo was so taken by his sharpness, he decided to follow Reb Aaron to Lakewood. He said that to learn both the depth and sharpness of the Torah meant that he could both immerse himself in and inhale Yiddishkeit. Shlomo was reputed to have been his prize pupil and legend has it that Reb Aaron cried when Shlomo left a few years later.

During this time, the Carlebach brothers drifted in and out of the chassidic shtellings of Bobov and Lubavitch. When he met the Boyaner rebbe, shlita, Shlomo recalled that the way the Boyaner took his hand and held it while he looked at him changed forever how he greeted people. Shlomo said he felt as if the rebbe was looking deep into his soul and wiping out any negative that may have been lurking there.

Shlomo became very close with Rabbi Menachem Mendel Shneerson when he became the Lubavitcher Rebbe. Recognizing Shlomo's ability to reach out to people, he sent him to talk to yeshivah boys. He would invite the best bochurim to learn Torah and chassidut with him late at night. Over the years, Shlomo invited hundreds of people from all walks of life to meet the rebbe. He told one story as part of his eulogy to the Lubavitcher Rebbe that bespoke both his intimate relationship with the rebbe and the kind of appeal he had to so many.

The story was that Shlomo left the rebbe's office late one night and boarded a subway to Manhattan. Sitting opposite him on the train was a young man wearing a tie-dyed shirt. After conversing with him for a while, Shlomo found out that he was Jewish, was getting married in a church on Shabbat to a non-Jewish girl and that it hadn't even occurred to him that there were other alternatives to his life. Shlomo, after talking about his own Yiddishkeit, asked if he wanted to meet his rebbe, who was a very holy man. Since the man was very taken with Shlomo, he agreed. Shlomo wasted no time. They got off the train at the next stop, crossed the tracks and went to Crown Heights. Shlomo took the man right to the office of the rebbe, who was surprised to see his young friend return so quickly. After a few words were exhanged and the Rebbe instructed Shlomo to say Tehillim, Psalms, he took the young Jew into his office. Shlomo said that three hours later, the rebbe and the young man emerged. The latter was shining so much, Shlomo said, he could swear that his soul had been washed clean like on Yom Kippur in the Holy of Holies. Needless to say, the wedding never took place.

Shlomo worked with the rebbe for years, talking to thousands of kids. Shlomo said, "You know, it goes without saying that while I worked for Lubavitch, I would never shake hand with girls, G-d forbid."

But as time went on, he felt his approach was lacking. "So one time I walked into see the rebbe and I said to him, 'Let's face it. Imagine I have a 100 young people. I say men on one side, women on the other. I already lose 90. They say that this isn't for them. Then I tell the girls not to sing and I lose another 10. Instead of talking to 100 people, I am talking to one.' I told the rebbe that these kids know nothing about Yiddishkeit, they could join an ashram tomorrow. If someone is having a heart attack, you don't give them a manicure. This is not what they need. So the rebbe said to me, 'I cannot tell you what not to do. I cannot tell you what to do. If you want to do something on your own, be matzliach, successful.' " For political reasons much more than for personal ones, Shlomo left, but he and the rebbe never lost their connection with and warmth for one another.

Shlomo was on his own for the first time in his life. He said, "I wasn't in yeshivah. I wasn't at Lubavitch. I was nowhere in the world. It takes so long to stand on your own feet. It's like being between heaven and earth."

Neila Carlebach married Rabbi Shlomo in 1972. Currently, she is collecting, compiling and archiving Shlomo's music and teachings for publication.

Opinions

Some thoughts on Kristallnacht

By Emil Fackenheim

Not April but November is the cruellest month of the year — not for Jews only but, in this century, for civilization. On Nov. 9, 1918 the World War I armistice, meant to lay foundations for peace, laid them instead for a worse war. Five years later to the day, Hitler's putsch, in failing, taught him how to succeed. And Nov. 9, 1938, exactly 15 years after that, saw Kristallnach.

That night of terror was not the first crime in history. It was, however, the first committed to worldwide publicity. The Final Solution, yet to come, was secret — though not for all — but when the synagogues burned all over Germany, the whole world knew, or could guess that worse was in store, but did little or nothing. For me at the time — an observer and victim — civilization collapsed during that grim November night and — in my view now — has yet to recover. Kristallnacht was the first mass crime to receive worldwide publicity, but not the last.

Not that I want to belittle what little was done. The gates of Britain opened quite a bit and among the saved were my parents, my younger brother and myself. My parents got out on the last plane.

But now, over half a century later, Kristallnacht anniversary belongs to the children, even to their children. In Living After the Holocaust (Lucy Steinitz and David Szony, eds., New York: Bloch 1975) survivors' children hear Elie Wiesel testify that he has "no answers" but "only questions." They hear him, respect, even revere him, but still ask: How can we, the next or next-to-next Jewish generation, live without answers? For Jews to confront the catastrophe, and be robbed of answers by its horror — is this not to despair of man and God, of a future for both Jews and Judaism, and thus a posthumous victory for Hitler?

In 1967 I wrote the "614th commandment" — the words became famous — that for Jews to grant such a victory is forbidden. Now, almost 30 years later, I would add the following: Let there be answers before questions. For future generations' sake, I hope this too will be famous.

What makes Wiesel's "questions" so Jewish, heart-rending but also — yes! — inspiring? He has answers prior to his questions — the rich reservoir of Tanach, Talmud, midrash, chassidic legend. Just so, let children be exposed to the Shoah only after an expopsure to Judaism, deep, loving, more committed on account of what is to follow. More, for all their scholarly codes, this exposure is needed by academics also. Can the Holocaust be the same for the heirs of perpetrators, bystanders, victims? And on this globe everybody is one of these: What doors except Shanghai's — a political accident — were open to Jews fleeing for their lives? Our own scholars, however, are heirs of the victims.

We have had catastrophes before. How have we survived? The year 70 CE saw the destruction of the Jewish state; Roman general Titus initiated an exile, for some Jews not ended even yet. In 135 CE, Roman Emperor Hadrian went further. Titus had failed to finish the Jews off; making Judaism a capital crime, the emperor thought would.

But led by their rabbis, the Jewish people resisted. "If Scripture did not say it," Rabbi Akiva said, aware of the boldness of what he was saying, "we could not say it. 'I shall redeem Myself,' says God, as though one could conceive of such a thing. When Israel went into exile," Rabbi Akiva concluded, "God, as it were, went with them."

Thus Titus was defeated. Forced to abandon their Land, the Jews were not abandoned by their God. When a few would assemble with the Torah, perhaps hiding from a pogrom even while reading, they had before them letters on parchment, but with them the presence of God.

And Hadrian? Again there is Rabbi Akiva, this time in extremis, as related in the Machzor, the Yom Kippur prayer book. He has kept teaching Torah, undeterred by Hadrian. Caught, tortured, martyred, he dies with Shema Yisrael on his lips. Even the angels lament that God needs martyrs. But need them He does, and as the angels accept, so, on Yom Kippur at worship, do Jews. With his last breath, Akiva overcame Hadrian and, through Judaism, saved his people.

A terrible foe he, but alas Hadrian was surpassed by Hitler. Hadrian created Jewish martyrs; Hitler murdered Jewish martyrdom. In making Jews choose between death and apostasy, Hadrian exalted Jewish choice. In shifting Jewish crime from faith to birth, Hitler destroyed it. And, since birth, even if Jewish, is innocent, the blood of Auschwitz cries to heaven. So do our questions. Martyrdom still is an answer, if only in extremis: the innocent, murdered in the twinkling of an eye, are only a question.

Are questions, then, all that we have? Not entirely. What may come in some later hour is concealed from our eyes. Here to see in our own hour is hope, tikvah, murdered in Auschwitz but resurrected in Jerusalem; and our prayers, actions, poems, philosophies, joys and fears, politics, must all be geared to not letting it die again.

Farrakhan, Blacks, Jews

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut

The spectacle of Louis Farrakhan presiding over the "Million Man March" on the day we Jews observed Shemini Atzeret was a worrisome though fascinating experience. He quoted the Hebrew Bible and the Gospels, along with the Koran. The huge crowd before him, he said, was a certain sign that this was not his doing but God's. He, Farrakhan, had clearly been chosen by God — and what human agency was there to doubt the will of the Divine?

Repeatedly he touched on "the Jewish problem." No, he averred, he was not an anti-Semite, far from it. He had never said anything about the Jews that was not the truth. (Presumably we would have to "prove" that we are not bloodsuckers and that our faith is not a "gutter religion.") The facts, alas, speak all too loudly of a demagogue who has found anti-Semitism a useful tool for rallying his troops. He — like others before him — depicts us as a major cause of black troubles.

He pleaded for total separation of blacks from the white community and emphasized that integration into the American scene was a chimera, and that all the ills besetting the black community are traceable to slavery and continued racism.

Yet the very nature of the black assembly, its calm, its dignity and its spiritual fervor bespoke another message. "We want to take charge of our own responsibilities" — that was the theme that had brought so many to Washington. To be sure, it was Farrakhan who had managed to tap into the incipient hatred that blacks have for a past that was spent in white chains, and while none of them would deny that racism was still all too present in our society, they came to affirm that they wanted to take their lives into their own hands, and see to their families, their jobs and the building of their communities.

White people often get impatient with hearing blacks remind them of their bitter centuries of servitude. But in a way, do we Jews not do the same with regard to our history? Do we not repeatedly remind ourselves of our 400 years of slavery in Egypt?

But there is also a difference, for when we look at the biblical record, we note two characteristics: we speak of our past in order to glorify God for the liberation that was effected through Divine intervention; and second, to be more compassionate towards strangers and those who suffer, because we ourselves have suffered so cruelly.

There is no question in my mind that Farrakhan is going to give us more trouble, for I think it is unlikely that he will abandon his anti-Semitic rhetoric. It has proven very useful to him in the past and despite what he may assert from time to time to the contrary, I believe he will stick with it.

But the disgust we have for him should not be transferred by us to the black community as such, for its needs are real, and we of all people should understand this. Farrakhan has fuelled anti-Semitism in the black community, but most of its proven leaders disavow Farrakhan the separatist and anti-Semite, and we Jews who have for so long stood for fairness and equity in society should not let him deter us in our struggle to make our community free of racism and prejudice of any kind.

Oslo 2 heightens divisions in Israel

(Rabbi Hartman's column did not arrive before deadline. It should appear in its regular slot on this page next month.)

By David Newman

The recent signing of the Oslo 2 accords has not been greeted with the same euphoria as that accompanying the original Oslo agreement some two years previously.

The right wing opposition to the peace accords has been vociferous. The new settler movement, Zo Artzenu, has undertaken activities such as the blocking of major road intersections throughout Israel, refusal to request permits for the holding of demonstrations and a call to their followers not to obey army orders to evacuate settlements or to partake in the important decennial census of population which is at present being undertaken in Israel.

These activities, designed to encourage public support for the opposition to the peace process, are not, however, having the desired effect. Many Israelis who are unhappy with the peace process have begun to disassociate themselves from the activities of the Zo Artzenu movement.

The Likud opposition party does not want to become tainted with this extreme form of activity, as it only serves to weaken, rather than strengthen, public support for their own opposition to the government. The government is able to win back public opinion in its favor by collectively portraying the right wing as irresponsible rabble rousers who do not serve the interests of the state.

The dilemma facing much of the Israeli population has probably been best summed up recently by President Ezer Weizman. A strong supporter of the peace process and of the need to reach a final territorial solution to the Israel-Palestinian problem, he has nevertheless been critical of some aspects of government policy. He has refused to grant clemency to some of the Palestinian prisoners who were scheduled to be released as part of the Oslo 2 accords, and has suggested slowing down the process until there is a clear cessation of Hamas terrorism. Opening his doors to representatives of the West Bank settlers, he has come under criticism from his own colleagues within the Labor party.

As a president of the people, however, he is probably doing little more than echoing the very real division of opinion amongst the general populace to which he is subject on his many visits to villages and settlements throughout the country.

Much of the Israeli population, however, including opponents of the peace process, is gradually becoming resigned to the inevitability of the major territorial changes which are taking place. That does not mean to say that they automatically support the notion of a Palestinian state or the evacuation of settlements — both of which are likely prospects should the Labor government be re-elected in 1996 — but that they accept the irreversibility of the transfer to Palestinian autonomy which has taken place so far.

The truth be told, most Israelis are happy to relinquish the day to day control over the two million Palestinian residents of the Gaza Strip and West Bank. Apart from the religious ideologues who refuse to accept the notion of anything other than Jewish sovereignty and control, what worries most of the population are issues of national and personal security, not the inherent belief in a Divine right to land.

Clearly, if, as has been reported lately, the PLO and Hamas are on their way to arriving at an agreement concerning the cessation of violence and their joint participation in the forthcoming Palestinian elections, this will do much to sway Israeli public opinion back in favor of the process. The loss of support for the Likud is already apparent when compared with the situation just some six months ago.

Israeli public opinion is quite fickle. It responds quickly and angrily to incidents of terrorism, but it also forgets quickly.

There appears to be a gradual meeting of diverse opinions that there is no turning back from what has been achieved thus far. Israelis have become attuned to the fact that their leaders now negotiate with the PLO, the terrorists of yesterday. Whether they will equally become attuned to the idea of a Palestinian state will probably have to await the outcome of the next elections.

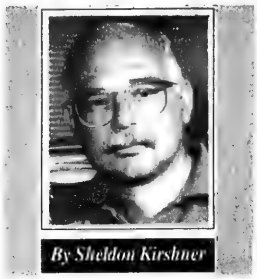
The Kirshner File

A household name in the Czech Republic

Arnost Lustig is not exactly a household name in North American literary circles. But in the Czech Republic,



By Sheldon Kirshner

600,000 copies of his novels — a phenomenal number in a country of that size — have been sold.

Lustig's novels — Night and Hope, Darkness Casts No Shadow, Diamonds of the Night and Dita Saxova — all deal with various facets of the Holocaust.

The popularity of his books, which have been translated into English, Hebrew and German, is easily discernible.

"The Holocaust touched not only Jews, but the entire population," he explained. "My novels are read because they pose serious existential questions."

Not surprisingly, Lustig — a Holocaust survivor himself — presents the Holocaust not just as a crime against Jews, but as an attack on humanity.

"It was a test for everyone," said Lustig, who was in Toronto recently as a guest of the International Festival of Authors. "It raised moral issues."

Lustig, who has lived in the United States since the 1968 Soviet invasion of what was then Czechoslovakia, was born in Prague in 1926. His father, Emil, was murdered in Auschwitz. His mother, Teresa, and his sister, Anna, barely survived.

Lustig himself escaped unscathed from the horrors of Terezin, Auschwitz and Buchenwald. Not long after his liberation, he joined Radio Prague, which promptly dispatched him to Jerusalem to cover the first Arab-Israeli war. It was an exciting time for Lustig, who once delivered a report on horseback to a waiting plane.

His experiences in Israel left an indelible impression. "I was fascinated by the courage of the Jewish fighters. It was romantic."

Romance of a different sort beckoned when Lustig fell in love with Vera Weislitzova, a soldier in the Israeli army. They eventually married and had two children. She wanted to remain in Israel, but Lustig was intent on returning to Prague. "I was a convinced Communist and wanted to be faithful to the party."

Back home in Prague, Lustig completed his university education, then began writing screenplays, some based on his own novels. He played a major role in creating what came to be known as "Czech New Wave Cinema."

He was unaffected by the anti-Zionist Slansky show trials of the early 1950s, possibly because they coincided with his national service. But Lustig remembers an incident in which his commanding officer claimed that Jews were at the root of Czechoslovakia's problems.

A liberal, Lustig ran afoul of the ruling Communist party because of the courage of his convictions. On a television program, he caused a commotion by disagreeing with a revered general who said he couldn't shed tears for Holocaust victims who had not resisted their tormentors. Later, during the Six Day War, he criticized the government for cutting diplomatic relations with Israel, which he had repeatedly revisited.

Eventually, Lustig was expelled from the party. In retrospect, he has no regrets about his long involvement with Communism, which, he believed, would foster democracy and racial equality.

"The Communists I knew during the war were beautiful people," he observed. "They were corrupted by power."

Asked why he had been an eager recruit, he replied: "There is a time in your life when you feel you want to belong to something. The party fulfilled my need. And while I was faithful, I was not blind. I still dream of a society that is democratic and fair."

Since 1973, Lustig has been a professor of literature and film at the American University in Washington, D.C., a job that enables him to pursue his writing.

Last month, following the publication of Children of the Holocaust, a collection of his stories, Lustig submitted his latest novel to his agent. It is a saga of his parents' lives.

Although his novels have been widely hailed, Lustig remains critical of his body of work. "I wish to write an honest book explaining the Holocaust, to write the real book about it. I haven't so far."

Remarkable collective

The cellblock in the Theresienstadt (Terezin) concentration camp was called the Republic of Shkid. From there, behind blackened shades, a group of about 100 Jewish boys, aged 13 to 15, produced a hand-written weekly magazine, Vedem (In the Lead), from 1942 to 1944.

Within its pages could be found poems, short stories, news clips and drawings. George (Jiri) Brady, a member of this remarkable collective and a resident of Toronto since 1951, contributed two pieces while working as an apprentice plumber in Theresienstadt.

More important, Brady, 67, spearheaded the effort to publish the original material in book form. It was published this past summer under the title of We Are Children Just The Same: Vedem, The Secret Magazine By The Boys Of Terezin (Jewish Publication Society of America, $29.95 US).

The book, said Brady in an interview, serves two purposes. "It's a monument to kids who were extraordinarily talented." Only 15 of the boys survived the war, and Brady came through it by the skin of his teeth. "And it helps fight the nonsense of Holocaust revisionists."

Brady and his late sister, Hana, were taken to Theresienstadt — a model German resettlement camp — in May 1942, a year after their parents, Karel and Margaret, were deported to Auschwitz, where they perished.

Life in Theresienstadt, while not easy, was infinitely better than in other concentration camps. "As long as you were healthy and young, you could survive," explained Brady. But he was also lucky. A friend of his parents took him under her wing, and he was fortunate enough to be placed in a barracks where Vedem was born under the inspiring guidance of a selfless man named Valtr Einsinger.

Of the estimated 15,000 children who passed through the camp, the majority died or were murdered. Brady almost met the same fate. In September 1944, he was shipped to Auschwitz. He recalls the barbed wire, the dogs and the horrible stench.

Eventually, Brady was put to work in a nearby railway carriage factory. "It was rough," he said.

On Jan. 21, 1945, following a gruelling forced march into Germany, he was liberated by the Red Army.

With the war over, Brady returned to his Czech birthplace, Nove Mesto na Morave, to visit his aunt and uncle. He didn't stay long. After completing his education in Prague, he settled in Austria and then in Canada.

In the aftermath of World War II, efforts by the Vedem boys to publish the collection were suppressed by the Communist authorities, though a samizdat edition appeared in 1978 and again in the late 1980s.

In Toronto, Brady — who had kept a copy of Vedem in a shoebox — tried but failed to find a publisher. Finally, Malcolm Lester, a local publisher, steered him to the Jewish Publication Society in Philadelphia.

A frequent visitor to the Czech Republic, Brady convinced the president, Vaclav Havel, to write a foreward.

Brady, the father of four children, has been successful here. For years, he was a plumbing contractor. Of late, he has branched into the acrylic magnetic window insert business. But his labor of love remains Vedem, a magazine which opens windows of understanding into the Holocaust.

Jewish ethical law requires compassion for the oppressed

By MURRAY TEITEL
Special to The CJN

Of all the events that have formed Jewish religious consciousness, none comes close to having the influence of the 400 years of slavery in Egypt followed by liberation.

So important is it, that many of the 613 religious observances the Jews are commanded to follow in the five Books of Moses are accompanied by a reminder of this epoch. Leviticus 19:35 is typical.

In the ancient Hebrew, whose majestic tone cannot be reproduced in English, God commands:

"And if there shall live with you a foreigner in your land, you shall not do him any wrong. As one born among you shall be to you this foreigner living in your midst and you shall love him like yourself because you were foreigners in Egypt: I am your God. You shall do no unrighteousness in judgment ... I am your God who brought you out of the land of Egypt."

God's meaning is clear: the Jews' experience as victims of oppression and injustice should sensitize them to the plight of the oppressed so that they would never themselves engage in such vile behavior.

There are many other instances. For example, the commandment to give beasts of burden and servants a day of rest is also justified by the enslavement in Egypt where, presumably, the Jews were forced to work seven days a week without respite.

Generations subsequent to the one that left Egypt had no personal memory of slavery; so the rabbis of antiquity saw the need to go one step further and decreed: "No matter the generation in which he is born, a person is obliged to regard himself as if he himself came out of Egypt." To this day, this phrase is repeated at least once a year by every Jew in the world who celebrates the Passover seder.

For the rabbis, it did not suffice that the Jews have some intellectual awareness that their ancestors suffered oppression in Egypt. They understood that the supreme importance of Jewish ethical law could only be appreciated by those who could emotionally put themselves in the shoes of victims of oppression.

The wisdom of this insistence was brought home to me on April 30, when a memorial for the victims of the Holocaust was held at Queen's Park, attended by the leaders of Ontario's three main parties. According to the report of one Toronto newspaper, the audience consisted mostly of Jews, many of whom were in the uniforms of World War II veterans. This is unfortunate. As long as Jews are the only ones remembering the Holocaust, holocausts are bound to reoccur. As long as genocide is something that happens only to other people — to Bosnian Muslims, to the world's aboriginal peoples, to Rawandan Tutsis, to Burundian Hutus, to Turkish Armenians, to Jews and even, mea culpa, to other Jews — holocausts are bound to reoccur.

To its credit, Holocaust Education Week, which in Toronto takes place from Nov. 9 to 19, treats the Holocaust not as a tragedy that affects only Jews, but as one that affects all of humanity. Almost half of the events take place in Catholic and Protestant churches. Among many other topics, there are lectures and films dealing with war crimes in the former Yugoslavia, the Nazi heritage of modern medical research, the psychology of the war criminal and attempts by Italian soldiers to protect Jews during World War II.

But if you indulge in this cornucopia of intellectual stimulation, try not to lose emotional sight of the victims. Think of them. Try to imagine what they went through. Try to fathom 1½ million children being herded into gas chambers. Promise yourself that you will do what you can to make sure that such a thing never happens again. Commemorate the Holocaust.

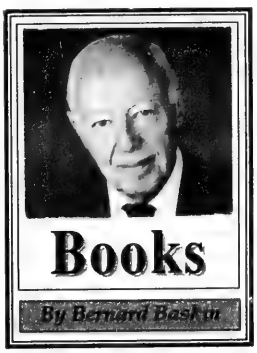
A collective portrait of this century



Coming of Age: The Story of Our Century by Those Who've Lived It by Studs Terkel (Random House, $35).

Growing old is like living on an island which gradually gets smaller and smaller. William James asked, "How can the moribund old man reason back to himself the romance, the mystery, the imminence of great things which our old earth tingled for him when he was young and well?"

Yet, old age has its compensations and rewards. There is many a good tune to be played on an old fiddle. John Muir, the American naturalist, wrote, "How beautiful the leaves grow old, how full of light and color in their days."

Many men and women in their later years remain creative and energetic, retain an openness of mind, and a continuing sense of curiosity and wonder at the beauty and mystery of the world. They accept the fact of aging without being intimidated by it.

At 83, Studs Terkel is still going strong. His Chicago daily radio program is immensely popular and his trailblazing books of oral history: Working, Race, Hard Times, and the Pulitzer Prize winning Good War, are widely read and praised.

Coming of Age is a collective portrait of our times derived from the voices of 70 men and women, the youngest of whom is 70 and the oldest 99. Taken together they provide a kaleidoscopic view of America over several generations. How did people work and live? What were the social political and economic realities? What about the changing sexual mores and the problems of race and religion?

The author's emphasis in eliciting replies is more on careers than on personal lives — and most of the subjects, like himself, are political and social liberals. What emerges are recollections of poverty during the Depression, the two great wars, labor strife, civil right struggles and the corporate jungle.

Some of those interviewed deplore the McCarthy era, the role of technology, the influence of television, the loss of civility on the part of the young, treatment of the elderly and ethnic and class divisions.

John Kenneth Galbraith, 85, maintains that government is an instrument of salvation, "The common charge of 'big government' comes largely from people who are looking for a moral reason to avoid taxes . . . We have a comfortable number of Americans with a fairly high standard of private living and yet we have this ferocious resistance to things that would improve our public standard of living."

Betty McCollister, 73, is a newspaper columnist in Iowa. She is concerned about the success of fundamentalists in political life. "They're very well organized and very well funded. Creationists say theirs is the absolute truth. No scientist would ever say that. That is the biggest problem: we are a nation of scientific illiterates. So we can be easily had .... Prayer in schools? It's an abomination. If God is stupid enough to think it's a real prayer, he doesn't deserve to be worshipped."

Terkel's net is wide enough to include the jazz bassist Milt Hinton, 83, the actress Uta Hagen, 75, Texas Congressman Henry Gonzalez, 76, Victor Ruther, 81, who, with his brother, founded the United Auto Workers and Robert St. John, 92, well-known journalist and broadcaster.

The indomitable spirit of the elderly interviewed is epitomized by the story one of them related of a 100-year-old man who lived in an abandoned automobile. Every morning at sunup he'd grab an axe and start chopping wood. He was asked why, at his advanced age, he wasn't getting a rest. He said, "If I didn't do this, this old body of mine would think I was through with it and that would be the end of me."

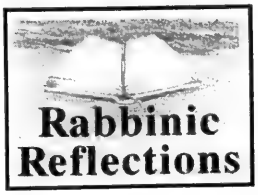
Writing a new midrash on an ancient bible story



By RABBI BARBARA BORTS

Lech Lechah is the parshah in which particularism enters biblical history for the first time. After futile attempts to create a just world through universal creation, God decides to attempt to create a just community through a particularist covenant. And so, enter Abraham and Sarah, who, obeying a simple command, "Get you forth," depart for a new world and a promise of progeny, land and blessing.

Progeny doesn't arrive so quickly, at least not through the expected channels, so Sarah gives her maid Hagar to Abraham. Hagar bears the child Ishmael, but still God promises a child, another one, to bear the family heritage and continue the incipient monotheistic belief.

Finally it happens with the birth of Isaac: "Tzachok tzachak li Elokim" (God has given me laughter) chortles Sarah and we delight with her as she rejoices over the miracle of her child. We rejoice with her and welcome Isaac into the world because we know that without Isaac there would be no Jacob, no people of Israel, no Exodus, no Sinai, no us.

We rejoice with Sarah over Isaac — and gloss over the other story, of Abraham and Hagar and the boy Ishmael. We in the Reform movement quite literally pass over the topic as we read the Akedah on the first day of Rosh Hashanah and the creation story on the second, but in many synagogues, the congregation hears the story of Hagar, Ishmael and their banishment.

Our joy — and a mother and son abandoned, cast out, crying in the desert. A terrible story until they, too, are promised nationhood of their own.

It's not hard to see where I am going from here. This story, the origin of the conflict between the ancestors of Isaac and Ishmael, is a story told from our point of view. The Muslims have the Koran, in which another tale, from another point of view, is outlined.

But our story, what does it tell us? That at the moment of one of our greatest joys, the beginning of our peoplehood, another suffered. While we revelled at knowing that now, with Isaac, a Jacob could come along, a voice cried out in the wilderness as a direct consequence of this great wonder. And we did not hear. Only God listened — and responded — with a separate promise of nationhood.

I shall make it explicit. Out of the ancient land of Palestine, the Zion to which our prayers constantly ached to return, a miracle happened — a nation was born. And as regularly as we repeat the story of the birth of Isaac and the discarding of Hagar and Ishmael, so too do we celebrate the creation of the modern state of Israel. And someone cries in the wilderness and we do not hear. Or listen.

I was raised, as I know many were, with an effective set of mufflers. Some of it was true, as with the hatred and the terrorism; and some was false — that there was no Palestinian people there before we arrived.

I don't know when it was that I took off the mufflers and began to listen to that lonely voice in the wilderness. I went to different places in Israel, met Arabs involved in peace and reconciliation work, met Jews and Arabs living together trying to teach peace.

For years, I had asked Christians to listen to how I felt about some of their stories and how they hurt and how this led them to despise and to murder me. And then Muslims made a similar request to us: "Please note that our Ishmael story is different and that yours hurts us. Hear ours, listen to ours."

So I listened. And became a fervent supporter of moves toward peace.

The world changes and moves on and sometimes old enemies become partners in peace. Such has happened in the Middle East as well. Ishmael and Isaac met to bury their father, and who knows? Maybe for other family occasions as well. And so we, Jew and Arab, have met and begun to sign treaties and to talk over differences.

But there are those on both sides who cannot hear each other and cannot feel each other's pain. There are those on both sides who want to read their birth story and endlessly recount their banishment story, so that the mother crying in the desert is not heard by her family — and, so the sides would tell us, even by God.

We are witnessing a new story, a birth and rebirth of two peoples who share the same ancestry and some of the same history. Writing a new midrash on Lech Lechah, in which Isaac and Ishmael, Sarah and Hagar, meet and celebrate family occasions, tell their stories, play and eat together. We in the Diaspora can help or hinder the process. We can support the forces of peace, now, not the forces of peace, never.

And we can begin to listen very carefully to the voices of those who do want to embrace us as brothers and sisters. Some ugly sounds are being made in our name. Do we wish for the endless saga of antagonsim to go on? I hope not.

Israeli teacher to lecture on The Halachic Process

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Lecturer and teacher Malka Bina will be in Toronto for a two day Yimei iyun seminar for women on The Halachic Process — methodology in the oral law.

The chevruta and lecture program will be held Nov. 13 and Nov. 14, from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., at Or Chaim Yeshiva, 159 Almore Ave. Luncheon will be served, and babysitting can be arranged.

Participants may register for the entire two days, or for any part of the program.

Bina is founder and educational director of Matan, a women's institute for Torah study, in Jerusalem and Ra'anana.

In a telephone interview from Israel, Bina told The CJN that hundreds of women of all ages come to Matan for adult education courses in such subjects as Tanach, Midrash, Talmud and Jewish philosophy.

"We train women to be teachers, scholars, and leaders. — to maximize their potential in Jewish studies," she said. "We want to help them reach fulfilment."

Matan also offers basic Judaism courses to Russian and Ethiopian immigrants. Young Ethiopian students are also given help in leadership development. "We want to help women in whatever situation they find themselves in," she said.

There is also a Scholars' Program, for women with advanced backgrounds in Jewish studies. Women receive a stipend while they are studying, she explained.

Baltimore-born and educated, Bina went to Israel to study after the Six-Day War, and "I'm still there," she laughed.

During her trip to North America, when she will visit Toronto, New York and Baltimore, she hopes to raise funds for the Scholars' program and the Ethiopian classes. "Many of the Ethiopian students are from poor families and can't pay their own fees," she said.

Cost of the seminar is a $100 donation to Matan.

and its profound pain and sorrow over the loss of a courageous leader who fought with heart and soul as hard for peace as he did in war.

We stand united in mourning with the people of Israel, the world Jewish community and peace-loving people everywhere, over the brutal extinction of such a giant figure.

Ironically and tragically, Rabin was gunned down by an extremist assassin at one of the largest peace rallies ever mounted in Israel, one in which Peace Now, the oldest grassroots peace movement, was a chief organizer.

We hope and pray that the peace process which Rabin so tirelessly and valiantly moved forward will continue and that it will ultimately bear the fruit of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East.

Among Rabin's final words were the following: "The fight for peace is a fight we cannot lose." Rabin is gone. But the inspiring vision of those words remains with us.

Former Premier Bob Rae

TORONTO — I would like to express my deepest sympathy to the community on the death of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

His brutal assassination is such a marked departure from the nature of Israeli society that it is impossible to understand. We all know the tensions involved in the peace process, but nothing has prepared us for this moment, and nothing can excuse it.

Yitzhak Rabin was a frequent visitor to Canada, and I met him many times, the last in Israel on my official visit as premier. He was, as always, blunt and forthright, direct and frank. He was prepared to risk much for the peace process, because as he kept saying, the long-term security of Israel depended on a solid peace with its neighbors, including the Palestinians. Now we know he took the ultimate risk — his life.

When Abraham Lincoln was shot, his colleague Stanton said, "Now he belongs to the ages." So it is with Yitzhak Rabin. He was a builder of Israel, a fighter for Israel, a soldier for Israel, a diplomat for Israel and a leader for Israel. Now he belongs to history. No assassin's bullet can change what he did, nor can it stop the drive for peaceful coexistence, which is the only basis for a truly stable and secure future for Israel and its neighbors.

Arlene joins me in sending our deepest condolences to the entire Jewish community.

Toronto Vaad Harabonim

TORONTO — There is no basis in Jewish tradition or law that would justify the claim made by the alleged killer that he was acting out of religious motives. Nothing in Halachah would grant sanction for the killing of one Jew by another, especially in the circumstances of this case.

The Toronto Vaad Harabonim condemns unequivocally and emphatically this wanton assassination and expresses its revulsion at the scandalous and despicable act. The Vaad deplores as well the notion that others might entertain a similar action in the future. Wilful murder, no matter what the motivation, remains abhorrent to us as Jews.

Whatever unhappiness, anxiety and dissent the Israeli government's policies have provoked in some quarters, whatever divisiveness Rabin's concessions during the peace process have engendered, however great the abyss that separates disparate factions among Jews, Judaism underscores that one must never countenance violence, terror and murder to settle disputes or determine right from wrong.

May the Jewish people, without regard to partisan commitment, be united in this resolve.

UJA canvassers digest news of Rabin's death

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The mood was sombre Sunday morning at the Lipa Green building, as 100 volunteers who were to take part in a United Jewish Appeal (UJA) telethon instead paid tribute to Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, slain the previous day.

The Toronto telethon was set to resume on Tuesday, following a Monday night community memorial service at Centennial Arena, organized by Canadian Jewish Congress, Ontario region; Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto; Canadian Zionist Federation; United Israel Appeal of Canada and B'nai Brith Canada.

"This is not the appropriate time for fundraising," said Carol Kassel, co-chair with Charles Gold of UJA's 1996 campaign. "Out of respect for the memory of Yitzhak Rabin and the sorrow the community is feeling, we have decided to suspend two days of the telethon to reflect on the legacy of Rabin."

Sandy Brown, president of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto, referred to Rabin as a role model. "We as a community must reaffirm the conviction that peace will be in our grasp."

The response to Rabin's death Saturday "has to be that peace efforts will continue — and they will continue," vowed Jehudi Kinar, Israel's consul general in Toronto, who addressed the volunteers.

A shaken Victor Yagoda, Jerusalem-based director of missions for United Israel Appeal (UIA) Canada, said that for the first time many Israelis don't have an answer and are just asking, "Why?"

"I think the moderate Israelis and moderate Palestinians will have a much closer relationship," Jewish Agency shaliach Baruch Gur told The CJN. "We have to realize there is a common enemy — the extremists and the fundamentalists on both sides."

"It's very hard to digest," said volunteer Elaine Simkevitz, a teacher at Associated Hebrew schools of Toronto. She had yet to figure out what she was going to say to her Grade 6 students the next day.

"I was shocked when I heard [the killer] was another Jew," said Eli Staiman, 12, who volunteered as a phoner because of his upcoming bar mitzvah.

"This is the meat and potatoes of what it is to be a Jew, which is doing for each other," said his father, volunteer Scott Staiman.

Richard Sadowski, co-chair of the Countdown '96 telethon, found it therapeutic to be with so many people who shared his shock and sadness.

"There's an outpouring of need and comfort here," he said, noting the many reassuring hugs.

Volunteers who stayed to call others about the changed telethon schedule were advised to take as long as necessary with each call for those who needed to talk.

— וואָס, שעמסט דיך מיט מיר צו גיין?

— גאָט באָהיט, טאַטע, וואָס טאָלט דיר איין...

— אָבער, אַז מען איז אַ דאָקטער, מיינסטו, דאַרף מען שוין נישט גאָט בעטן, גאָט לויבן?...

— נישט דאָס, טאַטע...

— וואָס דען? זאָגּ! ביסט אפשר מיד, חס ושלום, נישט געזונט.

— גיין, טאַטע! נאָר גיין וויל איך נישט.

— איך בין אַ בעלן צו ווייסן פאַרוואָס.

— נו, אודבא, זעץ דיך, טאַטע, איך וועל דיר זאָגן פאַרוואָס.

דער אַלטער לייגט אַוועק דעם טלית און זעצט זיך.

— נו, זאָג, אודבא, לאָמיך אויך פאָרשטיין אַ זאַך!

— גוט... שטעל דיר פאָר, טאַטע, אַז דו ביסט ריך, אַזוי ריך, אַז עטלעכע רובל מאַכן בי דיר פאַרנישט אויס...

דער פאָטער זיפצט אָפּ. כּדי פון זון אַ דאָקטער צו מאַכן, האָט ער זיך איבערן קאָפּ קאַרעצט. אַ הייזל האָט ער געהאַט — אויס הייזל, קאָמפּאַרט זיפצט ער, די מאַשינען אויך פאַרקויפט.

— נו, — מאַכט ער, און זיפצט שווער אָפּ.

— אַלזאָ, דו ביסט ריך, און קענסט איבער דיר וואָס אין אלמנה, אַ שווּאָכע, אַ קראַנקע אלמנה, לאָז נאָך זיין מיט קינדער און מען דאַרף זי שטיצן.

— וואָלט איך אוודאי געשטיצט!

— נאָר, צי וואָלסטו געווּאָרט, ביז די אלמנה זאָל דיך קומען בעטן, חלשן פאָר דיר, אויסגיסן בעכער טרערן?

— חס-ושלום? נאָך וואָס? אַז איך וויים...

— און בּאָס — וואָס איז ער, בעסער אַדער ערגער פאָר דיר?

— וואָס רעדסטו, אַ שאלה איז דאָס!

— נו, — טריאומפירט דער זון דער דאָקטער, — אַז גאָט איז בעסער, וויים ער אַליין, וואָס אַן אַרעמער, שוואָכער און קרענקלעכער מענטש בא-דאַרף, און וועט נישט וואַרטן, מען זאָל אים בעטן...

— אָבער...

— גאָט לויבן, מיינסטו?

— זאָל זיין...

— נו, טאַטע, וד וואָלט דיר געמעלן, עס זאָל זיך דיר עמיץ אַנטקעגן שטעלן און לויבן אין די אויגן אַריין: אַ וואוילער שניידער, אַ גוטער שנייַ-דער, אַן ערלעכער שניידער, אָבער וואָס הייסט אַ שניידער! באָר אַן אמתיער שניידער! אַן איין-איינציקער שניידער!

— אַך, — מאַכט אומגעדולדיק דער אַלטער, — די גרינע באָל גייט זיך אַן!

— און וויסטו פאָרוואָס? ווייל דו ביסט קיין באָר נישט, זאָלסט הנאה האָבן פון נאָרישן לויבן. און דו ביסט אַ מענטש, אַ שוואַכער מענטש, וואָס שעלטן קאָן דיר שאָטן, און לויבן העלפן...

— אָבער...

— קיין אָבער! טאַטע, קיין אָבער! גאָט איז קליגער פאָר אונדז, און ער, מיינסטו, דאַרף אונדזער לויב! ער דאַרף מען זאָל זיך דריי מאָל אין טאָג אַנידערשטעלן: אַ גוטער שניידער! אַ וואוילער שניידער —

— וואָס רעדסט דו...

— נו, זאָל זיין: אַ גוטער גאָט, אַ וואוילער גאָט, היטל און ערד בא-שאפן... צי וויים ער נישט בעסער?

דער אַלטער פאַרטראַכט זיך אַ רגע און כאַפּט זיך אין מיטן אויף:

— אַלץ ריכטיק, — זאָגט ער, — אָבער דאָונען מוז מען דאָך!

Counterbalancing evil

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — In an evil world, Senator Jerry Grafstein believes, you have an obligation to do something concrete to counterbalance evil.

That is what he set out to do in editing Beyond Imagination: Canadians Write About the Holocaust (McClelland & Stewart, 1995).

It all began, he told The CJN in an interview in his office, lined not just with legal tomes but also with volumes of Jewish scholarship, when he was watching 60 Minutes.

"They had an interview of a leading Holocaust revisionist — I don't even want to mention his name; to mention it is to besmirch one's breath. They were trying to do a balanced program [on Holocaust denial]."

The show infuriated him. "Why, in this day and age, would the foremost public affairs show use its prestige and legitimacy to give credibility to revisionist ideas? Even if the program disagrees [with the revisionist], just having the program gives it legitimacy," he said.

After discussing the matter with McClelland & Stewart's Avie Bennett, Grafstein sent letters to 38 established Canadian writers of Jewish descent, asking them to write articles on how the Holocaust had impacted on their lives.

In an unusual approach, Grafstein chose not to approach those known to be involved with the community or Holocaust remembrance efforts.

"The only criterion was that they be good writers. I wanted people from different spheres, like political science and sports."

Sen. Jerry Grafstein

The response was "much better than I expected," he said. He received 34 positive responses, and over 25 pieces were actually submitted, which were culled to 21 for publication.

Participants included Peter Newman, poets Irving Layton and Leonard Cohen, political pundit David Lewis Stein, mystery writer Howard Engel, Miriam Waddington, Rick Salutin, historian Michael Marrus, Geraldine Sherman and James Laxer.

Exploration

For the writers, the experience "tapped a hidden well, a hidden vein in their psyche and their soul," Grafstein mused. "It was an exploration in spiritual geography."

Many of the writers, he noted, were almost surprised when they realized how much the Holocaust had affected their lives and their work.

But that is a reflection of the Jewish experience, he said. "The rabbis taught that when the tragic events of Jewish history are played out, you can't look at yourself as being uninvolved. Look at it as if you are a direct witness."

Proceeds from Beyond Imagination will go toward establishing a program of medieval Jewish studies at the University of Toronto. "If we make enough money, I hope to establish a chair."

The University of Toronto has "one of the finest institutions of medieval studies at St. Michael's College. I feel it is important to have a parallel series of academic studies, because Jews made a great contribution to medieval thought in every sphere — mathematics, ethics, geography — even while always being persecuted."

Recognizing that he could not depend on McClelland & Stewart to publicize the book and that the chances of sales generating enough revenue to finance the chair are slim, Grafstein is calling on his not inconsiderable experience with the entertainment world to galvanize sales. Plans include television commercials and a half-hour television show.

The book will be officially launched at the University of Toronto bookstore on Nov. 13 and there will be a reception in the Senate in Ottawa, to which he has invited "every Member of Parliament and the Press Gallery."

Sen. Grafstein will appear at Toronto's Jewish Book Fair (in the Leah Posluns Theatre) on Nov. 12 at 8 p.m.

Bloor JCC holds official rededication

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Two years after hovering on the brink of extinction, the Bloor Jewish Community Centre (BJCC) hosted members, staff and visiting dignitaries for the official rededication of the downtown community facility.

"The Bloor JCC is here to stay," said centre president Karen Chisvin.

The rededication is a testament to all those who have come together to save the BJCC, said Metro councillor Olivia Chow.

"That kind of spirit and work is important now at a time when there are attacks on the kinds of things that bring us together," she said.

Her sentiments were echoed by Toronto councillor John Adams, who represents the ward immediately north of the centre. The rededication is "a celebration of what people can do when they pull together in times of adversity," said Adams, who has two children enrolled in BJCC programs.

Ontario Minister of Community, Culture and Recreation Marilyn Mushinsky said the success and independence of the BJCC shows what a grassroots campaign can do.

The future of the BJCC has been in question for several years, going back to the time when it was a branch of the Jewish Community Centre (JCC). The JCC racked up enormous debts and for years there was speculation that the Bloor branch would be sold to help pay part of those debts.

When the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto entered the picture to bail out and restructure the JCC, the Bloor branch became an independent, member-operated entity and the threat of sale ended. On its own, the BJCC is a profit-making enterprise, earning $150,000 on its operations last year, said facility director Bill Emery.

The BJCC has also embarked on an ambitious fundraising campaign, with a goal of $5 million. Three million is earmarked to repay part of the JCC's $15-million debt, while the rest will go toward renovating and upgrading the facility and ensuring its financial stability. BJCC fundraisers have already raised $1 million, Emery said.

Also addressing the rededication ceremony were Toronto councillor Dan Leckie, Chezi Zionce, spiritual leader of the downtown Narayever Congregation and Barry Alper and Michael Chesney of Mur-Ad Communications. They unveiled a model of a 35- by 25-foot mural that will go up in stages over the winter and adorn the north side of the building to advertise its programs and facilities.

Entertainment was provided by the cast of Chutzpah-a-go-go, who performed four songs from the show.

Moshav Noam co-op holds official opening

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Six years ago the social action committee of Congregation Darchei Noam took some concrete steps to deal with homelessness and the need for affordable housing: it sponsored a housing co-op.

The project came to fruition in May when the first residents moved to Moshav Noam, a six-storey building with 133 units at Lawrence and Bathurst. The co-op, now fully occupied, held its official opening late last month.

"It's amazing to wake up and see your dream come true," said co-op president and Darchei Noam member Valerie Hyman, the driving force behind the project.

This was a "Jewish response to a community problem," but the social action committee also wanted the project to be non-sexist, democratic and egalitarian, reflecting the values of Darchei Noam, a Reconstructionist synagogue, Hyman said.

Some 200 people were on hand for the ribbon cutting ceremony. Dignitaries included former Ontario premier Bob Rae, MPP Joe Cordiano (Lib. — Lawrence), Metro Councillor Howard Moscoe and Olivia de Miglio, a representative from MP Joe Volpe's office.

While the mood was generally festive, there was also sadness because celebrations like the one for Moshav Noam may be a thing of the past now that the Conservative government has axed 390 affordable housing projects across Ontario.

The co-ops were an important aspect of the former NDP government's overall approach to affordable housing, Rae told the audience. Moshav Noam was built and developed under his government, he said. "I'm here because I didn't want to miss one of my successes."

The members of the co-op have a commitment that they are a community of people from all walks of life, Cordiano said.

"This is a bittersweet historic occasion," Moscoe said. "It's the birth of a new community. But it may be the last co-op built in North York."

Moscoe was instrumental in establishing Lawrence Gardens, North York's first co-op, 12 years ago, and he helped guide the founders of Moshav Noam through the "many bureaucratic hoops," Hyman said.

The original developer, dissatisfied with the amount of money the government was offering, pulled out of the project a year and half ago, she said. "We almost didn't make it. We were just lucky."

She thanked co-op consultant Dan Fast and the Ministry of Housing and Municipal Affairs program coordinator Linda Mann for their help.

Moshav Noam, built at a cost of $13.8 million, houses some 200 residents of diverse ages. Six units are modified for people with special needs. Twenty-seven per cent of the units rent for market value, with rents starting at $675 for a one-bedroom. The rest of the units are subsidized. Approximately 70 per cent of residents are Jewish.

Residents must participate in the life of the building by getting involved in such committees as membership relations, social and gardening. Many of the residents expressed pride in their new home and the friendly atmosphere.

"It's wonderful," said resident and membership selection committee chair Sydney Solomon. "This place has people who will say good morning and good afternoon every time they see you."

"A year and a half ago I didn't even know what a co-op was," said Gail Puder. "Now I'm running for the executive."

Lest We Forget

On November 11 we recall with love our dear ones who died in the service of our country and humanity as we also mark the 50th Anniversary of the Holocaust and the end of World War II.

THEY WILL NEVER BE FORGOTTEN!

In our Sunnybrook Chapel, dedicated in memory of Harvey Lister, we offer a unique opportunity to memorialize those of our loved ones who served in any capacity by inscribing their names on the Veteran's Honour Roll or Donor's Wall.

The Jewish Chapel in Sunnybrook Health Science Centre is the first in Canada built and dedicated exclusively as a Synagogue to serve the spiritual and religious needs of the Jewish community and the over 40 Jewish veterans who reside within the hospital complex.

Perpetuate the memory of your loved ones by continuing the tradition. Inscribe their names on the sacred walls of our Chapel.

Sarajevo's darkest days are behind it: mayor

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — There were times during the 3½-year siege of Sarajevo that Tarik Kupusovic believed the city was going to fall.

Electric power had been cut off, there was no drinking water, heating fuel was in short supply and shells were raining down on the Bosnian capital at the rate of 100 to 200 per day.

An estimated four million shells pummelled Sarajevo in all, killing 11,000 Bosnians and wounding another 60,000.

Despite that heavy toll, the city did not fall and now, with the possibility of peace approaching, the darkest days appear to be behind it.

"We learned that people are stronger than we realized," Kupusovic said.

As mayor of the beleagured Bosnian capital, Kupusovic had a bird's eye view of the agony experienced by Sarajevo's half-million citizens.

People were terrorized by the shelling. Children were forced to attend makeshift schools in nearby apartment basements because a 10-minute walk outdoors was too dangerous, he said.

The city's streets were stripped bare of trees to provide firewood for cooking and heat.

And there was the morale factor, as thousands left the city rather than put up with the danger and uncertainty of life.

(Most of the city's pre-war Jewish population of 1,600 was evacuated by the Jewish Joint Distribution Committee (JDC). The city's Jewish community centre has served as a clearing-house for medical supplies and clothing provided by Diaspora communities, including Toronto's, via the JDC, for the benefit of all Sarajevans regardless of ethnic background.)

Speaking in halting English to about 150 people at the Holy Blossom Temple, Kupusovic said two synagogues in and around Sarajevo had sustained heavy damage from shelling, while the city's medieval Jewish cemetery is on the front lines of fighting.

Potable water

Kupusovic said Serbian attackers have tried to strangle the city and make life difficult, in the hopes of eventually dividing it.

But in the wake of recent NATO air strikes against Serb positions, Sarajevo's condition has improved, Kupusovic said. Natural gas is getting in and potable water is available for one or two hours a day.

"Sarajevo has to be saved as the centre of Bosnia-Herzegovina, where people can live together in freedom, in a united, not a divided city. It's impossible to make ethnic lines in the city," he said.

Returning private property that had been seized under the communist regime to its rightful owners and rebuilding the city's infrastructure would be undertaken after peace is reached, he said.

In the more immediate future, Kupusovic issued a plea for humanitarian aid, including food and clothing, as well as support for peace.

Kupusovic's address was sponsored by the Canadian Council for Reform Judaism (CCRJ) and the Bosnian-Canadian Relief Association.

Israeli, Palestinian artists collaborate on exhibit

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to the CJN

TORONTO — Some 250 people, including many Israelis and Palestinians, attended the opening reception for Building Bridges, a touring exhibition of the work of six Israeli and six Palestinian artists that opened here recently.

"I can't think of a better use for our community centre than this evening, when we can build bridges and bring people together," said Flavio Belli, director of the Joseph D. Carrier Art Gallery in the Columbus Centre, North York, where the show remains on view until Nov. 26.

A major sponsor of the show is the Consulate General of Israel in Toronto. In his brief remarks, Consul General Jehudi Kinar quoted an expression of Rabbi Nachman of Bratslav: " 'The whole world is a very narrow bridge and the most important thing is not to be afraid,' " he said. "We shouldn't be afraid of the friendship that has arisen in the last few years between the Israelis and the Palestinian people."

Other sponsors of the exhibit are the Zukerman Charitable Foundation, the Canadian Friends of Peace Now, Meridian International Centre and the Columbus Centre, the Italian community's elegant, art-filled building which has staged many other multicultural events.

The opening attracted political dignitaries including Ontario Attorney General Charles Harnick, and Joseph Volpe, MP for Eglinton-Lawrence.

Noting that the artists had been working together for more than 10 years, Helen Zukerman of the Zukerman Foundation said, "I suspect that political change occurs first in the kitchens and studios of people like us."

Diverse visions

Thanks to Air Canada, two of the six artists represented in the show, Tamar Getter and Taleb Duweik, an Israeli and Palestinian respectively, were present at the opening.

The show's roughly 40 pieces present a diversity of visions and styles with no apparent overriding unity. Sulieman Mansour's large canvases, with their rough surfaces, imbedded objects and designs and desert colors, are perhaps the most evocative of the Middle Eastern landscape, and his large mixed media sculpted scrolls seem appealingly tactile.

None of the works seem overtly political and there is very little anger in evidence. The closest thing to a political statement is made by Arnon Ben-David's Madrid Paintings, a cycle of highly-stylized canvases showing a group of people at a conference table. Ben-David explores shapes and colors as though trying to extract some deep mystical meaning in the temporary postures of the negotiators.

Jawad Mahmud used a UNRWA food relief sack as a canvas for an abstract painting.

Moshe Gershuni has woven spiritual and religious themes into two abstract canvases. One bears the biblical quotation, "A voice was heard in Rama of mourning and bitter weeping," while the other says, "The Lord will give strength to His people and will bless His people with peace."

Artists Tamar Getter (right) and Taleb Duwek flank Israeli consul general Jehudi Kinar at the recent opening of Building Bridges.

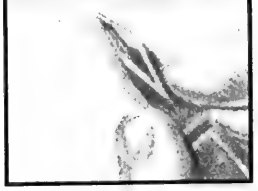
A fight for Quebec's political soul

From the editor's desk



Tuesday morning in Montreal the night seemed to bleed into dawn with minimal separations of light, and the sky overhead, grey and gloomy, expressed the mood of the community. Denied even a momentary, sweet savoring of victory the night before by the shocking, mean-spirited remarks of Premier Jacques Parizeau, No voters were further wearied by the twice-prodded threats of yet another referendum, very soon.

The swift calls by both Lucien Bouchard and Parizeau for another referendum put paid to the notion that the separatists are truly loyal to democratic principles. Unwilling to abide the negative result, Parizeau immediately attempted to delegitimize it. Hence he divided the voters of Quebec into "us" and "them," into old-stock and ethnic and yearned for "revenge". He still has not apologized for these dangerous divisions. Nor has Bouchard expressed any regret that they were made.

The French language media did criticize Parizeau; but they were slow off the mark. Very few condemned the man or his remarks at their first opportunity, namely, the day after he made them. It seemed to me more than a coincidence that the bulk of French-language criticisms appeared after American media giants had shone an embarrassing spotlight onto Quebec's troubling nationalism.

CNN cameras appeared on the scene. The New York Times carried an editorial on the subject last Wednesday. And on the day after the referendum, Jack Silverstone, national executive director of the Canadian Jewish Congress, was interviewed for The CBS Evening News with Dan Rather.

But there was other evidence of the separatists' questionable loyalty to democratic principles. Stories were legion of how No voters were "bothered" and even, in some cases, intimidated by Yes-side scrutineers. Some of the examples reported to me would be laughable were they not so enraging.

In at least one of the predominantly No voter polls, wearing the color red was deemed by the Yes-appointed polling officer to be illegal propagandeering. Thus, Remembrance Day poppies were ordered removed. In one instance, an elderly woman had to return to her home to change the red sweater she was wearing.

The number of rejected ballots reached almost 90,000, exceeding by 40,000 the entire margin of the No victory. And yet the separatists did not ask for an official re-examination of the rejected ballots. The obvious reason for their disinterest in these ballots was that the vast majority of them indicated or attempted to indicate a No vote. In one of the predominantly No ridings, 12 per cent of the ballots cast were rejected. One can only speculate that a re-examined margin of victory, though still small, may have been doubled.

Finally, we saw and heard Bouchard flatly refuse to "sit at the table" with federalists to negotiate a new relationship with Quebec until his forces win the next referendum. We also read Parizeau's interview, in which he disclosed that there was no way he would have arrived at an agreement with federalists regarding sovereignty and association.

Fast and furious, new events unfolded last week almost every day: the referendum voting, the referendum result, the premier's disgusting concession speech, his resignation, his refusal to apologize, Bouchard's refusal to even consider constitutional reform and speculation about his succession to the premiership. Throughout the week, it became increasingly clear that to the separatists, democratic principles were mere inconveniences to be tolerated, not pillars on which to build.

It is not a wonder, therefore, that the people I met were simply exhausted, tired physically and stretched emotionally very thin. However, the vast majority of No voters – whether in the shops at 6900 rue Decarie, in restaurants, at the offices of the FEDERATION CJA, at the Canadian Jewish Congress, or in crazily-speeding taxis – spoke with steel-jawed determination about fighting back. But they want and need help from the rest of Canada.

The fight for Quebec's political soul is also a fight for the integrity of Canada's body politic. Thus, it is as much our fight as it is that of our fellow federalists in Quebec.

Referendum vote scares ex-Montrealers

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Fear. Anger. Concern for their loved ones still in Quebec.

Those are the emotions most often mentioned by six Jewish former Montrealers who watched last week's referendum in tense anticipation.

Referendum Quebec

In interviews with The CJN, the Quebec six repeatedly said they and family members who remained in la belle province feared the consequences of a sovereigntist victory. Adding fuel to their concerns were Premier Jacques Parizeau's inflammatory post-referendum remarks, when he blamed the loss on "money and the ethnic vote."

"I watched the referendum on eggshells," said attorney Larry Butkowsky, formerly of the Montreal suburb of St. Laurent. "I still have a lot of family and friends there and as a Canadian, I was quite nervous and anxious about a potential Yes vote."

Butkowksy said his sister and parents "were incredibly nervous to the point of panicky about a separatist win."

They were concerned about the economic consequences of a Yes vote and about the future of anglos in the new Quebec, he said.

Pointing to language and sign laws advanced in the past by provincial separatists, Butkowsky said "anglo-Quebecers don't have the same rights as anglo-Canadians as a whole. If one's rights and freedoms are being limited within Confederation now, one can only hazard a guess what would happen under a sovereign Quebec."

Butkowsky, who moved to Toronto in 1987, said Parizeau's speech appalled and disgusted him. "But in a bizarre sense, I'm not upset that it came out. As ex-Quebecers, we know the nationalist, pro-sovereignty side is racist to an extent. Usually, comments are made behind the scenes but for him to speak up allows us to acknowledge what we're dealing with in Quebec."

Lawyer Bill Herman, who grew up in Snowdon and St. Laurent, said his mother, aunt and cousins, who remain in Montreal, "were scared. Everyone's scared," particularly about the disastrous economic consequences that many expected would have followed a separatist win.

He was relieved when the No side won, "but it was too close for comfort.

"I was particularly taken aback by Parizeau's speech," he said. "It seems to be a statement that Quebecers are a group of people not defined by provincial residence but by their ethnic background, that the votes of [francophone] Quebecers are more important. That's a very dangerous attitude, an attitude that's indicative of some part of the nationalist movement."

Lana Bell, who left Notre-Dame de Grace (NDG) for Toronto about 20 years ago, felt "scared" as she watched the voting.

"I think the separatists are ignorant and selfish. I think we've done a lot to accommodate Quebec. They have a distinct society and I think they have a special status. I think they can have a distinct society without separating."

Bell said her mother feared a separatist victory and both parents felt they would have been hurt financially should Yes have won.

Bell said she believed the nationalist element in Quebec would continue to push for sovereignty until they win.

Linda Schwartz, an office manager originally from Chomedey, left Quebec to be with her children. "Our name is Schwartz, not Seguin. When [former premier] Rene Levesque said if you don't like Bill 101, take the 401, we took it."

Schwartz was "very nervous" watching the referendum. "You don't know what's going to erupt. There are a lot of fanatics ... I listened to what Parizeau said ... I know there are radicals and fanatics. There's a lot to be worried about."

Her sister and friends who remain in Quebec were "very concerned. It's a very scary situation."

Despite the No vote, "Parizeau and [Bloc Quebecois leader] Lucien Bouchard said they aren't going to let it go. Quebec wants independence. They'll cut off their noses to spite their faces. They'll realize that only after it's over," she said.

Lorne Ordel, a businessman who's originally from Cote St. Luc, and his wife Raisy, originally from Snowdon, watched the referendum as well. They have lots of friends and relatives still in Montreal and "they felt they were going to lose their country. Even though they are English-speaking Quebecers, they consider themselves true Quebecers," Ordel said.

But "they were made to feel as if they weren't true Quebecers and that made them sick.

"Now, they have Canada to back them up. If not, they'll become non-entities without being considered true Quebecers. They'd be considered second class inhabitants of Quebec even though they've been there as long as anybody else," he said.

Parizeau's speech shocked him. "I felt that as a leader, he should be concerned about all the people and he seemed to be concerned only about francophone people."

Ordel said it was unfair that Quebec is dominating the national attention. "It's like having three kids and always paying attention to one."

Quebec leaders should focus on bread and butter issues instead. "Let them enjoy their culture. We're not depriving them of it," he said.

Joel Lehrer, a financial manager originally from Cote St. Luc, was concerned about the "tremendous impact on the economy and interest rates had it gone the other way."

It would also be cruel to divide the country. Anglos in Quebec "might perceive of themselves as second-class citizens in an independent Quebec and Parizeau's remarks makes that even more so," he said.

'Disgusting and appalling'

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VICTORIA — Quebec Premier Jacques Parizeau's remarks blaming the Yes loss on "money and the ethnic vote" was denounced by Canadian Jewish Congress leaders here.

Referendum Quebec

Renee Switzer Bellas, chair of the Congress national executive, told The CJN in a phone interview from Vancouver, "I can hardly contain myself to be polite. What we saw on TV is the real Parizeau. What he said was disgusting and appalling."

She said Parizeau "obviously" doesn't understand the nature of the people of Quebec and the rest of Canada, and has no realization of the real situation — that Canada is a multicultural nation.

Dr. Michael Eiterman, CJC Pacific region chair, said Parizeau should have tried to heal the wounds of the campaign and not make things worse. "At a time like this, most politicians should be statesmanlike and should calm the potential for hatred and violence."

Allan Dutton, a Vancouver spokesperson for a number of anti-racist groups, denounced Parizeau's remarks in a radio interview.

At the legislature in Victoria, where the fleur-de-lis flew all referendum day, Premier Mike Harcourt said the No vote, slim as it was, provided a sense of relief.

The premier praised British Columbians "for reaching out to our brothers and sisters in Quebec," especially at the massive national rally in Montreal. He said he had received numerous letters and calls from B.C. residents voicing their affection for Quebec.

Jewish groups slam Parizeau for remarks

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Premier Jacques Parizeau's announcement of his resignation does not mean Jewish community officials have forgiven

Referendum Quebec

or forgotten his blaming "money and the ethnic vote" and his emphasis on that fact that 60 per cent of "us" voted Yes in his referendum concession speech.

Both Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC) and B'nai Brith (BB) denounced his comments in the strongest terms. Both appealed to other sovereignty leaders to dissociate themselves from Parizeau's statements, and expressed the belief that the premier's views are not representative of most Quebecers.

BB sent a letter to Bloc Quebecois leader Lucien Bouchard asking that he "quickly move to reassure the ethnic population of Quebec that you and the vast majority of your supporters have zero tolerance for such loathsome statements.'

At a press conference, BB officials denounced Parizeau's comments as "racist" and "scary."

CJC president Goldie Hershon said the organization is "appalled."

"Such distinctions between various segments of the Quebec population ... are reprehensible. We hope Quebecers, and especially leaders of the sovereigntist movement, will react forcefully to unequivocally denounce Premier Parizeau's remarks."

CJC all but called for Parizeau's resignation, saying "his ability and, indeed, his right to govern, may be legitimately questioned."

"His comments were disgusting, leaving all minorities with a sense of insecurity, if not fear," said BB vice-president Stephen Scheinberg, a Concordia University history professor.

After the concern expressed by minorities before the referendum about scapegoating in the event of a narrow No, Scheinberg said he "never dreamed it would be the premier himself" who would lead the finger-pointing and "call for vengeance."

Scheinberg added that "only a few stupid hooligans were inspired by Parizeau" and believes the vast majority of Quebecers do not share the premier's "xenophobia."

At the same time, BB commended Bouchard, as well as Quebec Intergovernmental Affairs Minister Louise Beaudoin, for the reconciliation they spoke of after the referendum results were in.

Both CJC and BB spoke of the need for bridging the divisions between Quebecers that have come to the surface after this very close referendum.

CJC called on the population to show "political and social maturity" by uniting in the common cause of prosperity and harmony.

"It is more important than ever that Quebecers work together in pursuit of reconciliation through a dialogue committed to ensuring the place of Quebec within Canada," said CJC Quebec region chair Reisa Teitelbaum.

MONTREAL — The mood in the community here after the referendum was generally one of relief and a sense that no one is packing their bags — at least for now.

While former Equality Party leader and MNA Robert Libman, now a radio talk show host, deplored Parizeau's "ethnic vote" comment as inflammatory and "bordering on racism," he feels the mood among Jews has lifted considerably with the No vote.

"But there is a sense we are just buying time," he added, as the country enters a period of uncertainty with Parizeau's resignation.

How the political situation evolves over the next few months may well influence some Jews' decision to stay in Quebec, he believes.

Rabbi Lionel Moses, a Toronto native who moved to Montreal in the summer, after 25 years in the United States with his wife and three young sons, said he is now looking to buy a house because he is optimistic national unity has been given a second chance.

"I'm naive enough to be hopeful this is an opportunity to bridge the gap between francophones and anglophones, and that the goodwill shown to Quebec will lead to a recognition of its distinctiveness ... I think Canadians gained a sense of how perilous the situation is." — J.A.

Young Quebecers ponder their future in province

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — The vote — to the temporary relief of the massively federalist Jewish community — was a No, even if a razor-thin one.

Referendum Quebec

But will this slimmest-of-margins victory serve to reassure Quebec's young — mobile Jewish adults — that their future can still lie in Quebec?

Or will the forbidding prospect of yet another referendum down the road and the continuing, divisive constitutional gridlock send many of them packing anyway?

Leaders from Jewish young adult groups sought to put a positive spin on last week's events by affirming the commitment of the younger Jewish generation to carry on.

But they did not deny the potential lasting damage done by Premier Jacques Parizeau when he talked bitterly of the referendum being lost to "money and the ethnic vote."

Such a statement, The CJN was told, may have confirmed some Jewish young people's worst suspicions: that in the final analysis, they are unwelcome.

However, it was also stressed, Parizeau may also have made younger Jews more determined than ever to stand their ground and to fight for federalism and the preservation of a vibrant Jewish community.

"Some people might say: 'I've had it. I'm not wanted,' " allowed Richard Diamond, co-chair of FEDERATION CJA's Young Adult Division (YAD) and a 35-year-old executive.

"But I also think that most young adults would like to find a way to stay in Montreal."

Six years ago, during the build-up to Meech Lake, Diamond considered moving away with his family, but opted to stay after he came to the conclusion that "my family and community are here, that we could prosper here."

But he does think a Yes vote could trigger "a significant exodus."

Robert Presser, co-chair of Canadian Jewish Congress, Quebec region's (CJC-Q) youth committee, predicted the referendum vote will result in younger Jews carrying on with whatever plans they had before Oct. 30.

"If they'd already decided to leave, they will still leave. If they decided to stay, they will stay," said Presser, 30. "No one is changing their plans."

But like Diamond, he agreed that "all bets are off" in terms of a potential exodus of young people if a future referendum produces a Yes result.

Harvey Levenson, a Montreal businessman who co-chairs FEDERATION CJA's ProMontreal project, launched several years ago to encourage Montreal's younger Jewish generation to continue their lives and careers in Quebec, was unwilling to speculate on what Montreal's younger Jews would do following a Yes vote.

But last week's No result simply means that ProMontreal "will have a bigger role to play" in the months to come, in getting its message out that younger Jews should continue to build their lives and careers here.

But "if anyone is looking for a reason to leave, they will find a reason," he said.

Jared Isaacson, a 26-year-old social work student at McGill University who chairs FEDERATION CJA's three-year-old Student Federation, agreed that the referendum's results reinforced the need to "stay and fight."

Isaacson said he also thought about moving, until one year ago, when his community involvement and studies "cemented my determination" to stay.

In Isaacson's mind, Parizeau's remarks, as ugly as they were, should make younger Jews more determined than ever to stand their ground.

But unlike Diamond, Isaacson is not persuaded that a Yes vote would trigger a renewed exodus of Jewish young people.

Intensifying the Jewish experience

By MARC A. KATES
Special to The CJN

JERUSALEM — To have been given the opportunity to study at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem!

I arrived in August with many expectations and wishes for the coming year. Emotions overwhelmed me as my plane touched down at Ben-Gurion International Airport.

Once the plane doors opened, we all became aware of the sweet smell of our land. Our eyes filled with tears when we arrived at the terminal, where overhead it welcomed visitors: Bruchim haba'im l'Yisrael.

I was no longer a tourist as on previous visits. I grew up in Toronto, but Israel was going to be my home for the next year.

Since my arrival, I have seen the daily lives of Israelis. How terribly frightened I was on the morning of the bus bombing here in Jerusalem! Many of my fellow classmates were also shaken up. But after the bombing and after the protests, the Israelis continued on with their lives.

And I still can't understand the pain that my aunt and uncle feel every time my 19-year-old cousin returns to his army post in Gaza. For them, it is a duty that he owes to his country. While I think about the movie I want to see on the weekend, he thinks about the safety of a Jewish settler in Gaza.

It was amazing for me to celebrate the yomim tovim here in Jerusalem. Cashiers wished the clients Shanah Tovah in the supermarket and the atmosphere of chag is a feeling I will never forget.

Rosh Hashanah was particularly interesting. First, it did not feel like the Rosh Hashanah that I know. The weather was unusually warm and the Israelis dress down when they go to shul. As some men entered the synagogue, I was shocked. In one hand, they carried their tallit bag and in the other, they carried a gun. For a Canadian it is rare to see a firearm, let alone one in synagogue.

Besides the "surprises" that I noted, I was excited to see all the preparations for celebrating the yomim tovim. Before Yom Kippur, I saw religious men flinging chickens around their heads for kaparot.

I davened Yom Kippur services in the campus synagogue atop Mount Scopus. The shul has a three-panel window that looks out directly over the entire city and I watched the sun set over the Old City as the congregation sang Kol Nidrei. All of what it means to be Jewish is intensified by the experience.

Jewish, Muslim students cooperate on program

By JESSICA PELT
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — The Jewish Students' Union (JSU) at the University of Toronto has begun to construct a path for the future.

Recently, the JSU was asked by the Muslim Student Association of U of T to cooperate during the mayor of Sarajevo's visit to the campus to give a talk.

Moshe Morris, a second year Political Science and History student and political action chair of JSU, agreed, because he saw this as a way of opening dialogue with Muslim students.

The JSU's involvement in Dr. Tarik Kupusovic's visit, which took place recently at Convocation Hall, included selling tickets and supporting the event.

Following the lecture, which Morris described as an impassioned speech about the beseiged city, Morris and Lance Davis, program director of the JSU, were invited to a private reception with the mayor. Kosher food was served.

Morris and Davis initially decided to accept the invitation because they felt it was a way to show Jewish student support for the people of Sarajevo.

Although Kupusovic has continued on his North American tour, the event's importance has just begun. "After all," says Morris, "being on campus is about learning, expanding and accepting. We need to trust each other. The best way to shatter stereotypes is by meeting and discussing with other students. We need to set up dialogue."

By accepting the Muslim Students'invitation, Davis and Morris have shown the JSU is willing to open dialogue and work together on issues which are important to both student groups. And with more programs in the works, a new path of trust and cooperation is being built.

Labor leader 'had a feel for the less fortunate'

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Longtime labor leader Al Hershkovitz died recently of apparent heart failure while convalescing from surgery. He was 82.

Hershkovitz' labor career began in the 1930s when he organized fur and leather workers in Toronto.

Even as a hospital patient before his unexpected death, he made it his business to find out whether the nurses had a union.

"He had a feel for the less fortunate people in our society. That kept him going," his nephew, Toronto lawyer Arnold Bruner, told The CJN.

Bruner described his uncle in a eulogy as "full with the wonders of life and enjoying every moment of living. He was energetic, intelligent, analytical, brimming with good humor and goodwill — and love."

Born in Dzalachiz, Poland, Hershkovitz immigrated to Canada as a young boy in 1921. Coincidentally, his first night in Canada was spent in the old folks' home at 33 Cecil St. — later site of the union office he would occupy for many years until his retirement.

From 1956 until he retired in 1986, Hershkovitz was the business agent of the Fur, Leather, Shoe and Allied Workers' Union.

Both during his working years and after, he held executive positions in organizations such as the Ontario Federation of Labor, Histadrut, the New Jewish Fraternal Organization that split off from the United Jewish People's Order (UJPO) and the Jewish Labor Committee, a pioneer campaigner for human rights legislation.

In 1977, Hershkovitz helped found the Urban Alliance on Race Relations. He was also a member of the NDP's provincial council and a strong supporter of former Ontario premier Bob Rae, who spoke at his funeral.

A former Communist, Hershkovitz renounced his association with the party in 1956 when then Soviet leader Nikita Kruschev revealed atrocities against Jews committed by his predecessor Josef Stalin.

Hershkovitz was predeceased by his wife Fay. He leaves a brother, Dr. Murray Herst; companion Ilse Young; daughters Ethel Patt, Freda Drukier and Linda Hershkovitz; eight grandchildren and one great-granddaughter.

Bar Ross from classes Supreme Court urged

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Although they differed on the criteria for doing so, Canadian Jewish Congress, B'nai Brith's League for Human Rights and the Canadian Civil Liberties Association (CCLA) last week urged Canada's highest court to bar Malcolm Ross from the classroom.

The organizations agreed that Ross, formerly a teacher in a Moncton-area school, should not be put in a position where he could teach children.

Congress lawyer Joel Richler took the position that Ross could not possibly serve as a proper role model for children in his care. Richler asked the court to rule that a teacher must comport him/herself as a proper role model.

A "poisoned atmosphere" was created in the school, even though Ross expressed his views outside the classroom, said Keith Landy, who served as Congress co-counsel in the case. Congress has been a party to the Ross proceedings from their inception.

In its presentation to the Supreme Court of Canada, the CCLA argued the court should adopt a "reasonable apprehension" of bias test to determine whether a teacher could be barred because of out-of-classroom activities, said Alan Borovoy, general counsel for the CCLA.

"The mere fact that [Ross'] impugned remarks were made out of class does not end the matter. In our view, the test should be based on [whether] there's a reasonable apprehension that he'd mistreat youngsters under his care," Borovoy told The CJN.

B'nai Brith's League for Human Rights took a different tack, arguing that a number of international treaties oblige Canada to eradicate hate propaganda and that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms should be interpreted in light of those obligations.

Recounting his arguments before the court, League counsel Marvin Kurz said Ross' rights to freedom of speech and religion must be balanced with the rights of the children under his care. Recent cases indicate the best interests of children outweigh the rights even of parents, let alone teachers, Kurz said.

Landy said the Ross case "will be one of the most important cases dealing with human rights legislation. It's going to establish once and for all that a teacher is expected to conduct himself inside and outside the classroom in a manner that's discriminination free."

But Ross' lawyer, Doug Christie, argued that his client's employer, the Moncton-area school board, had no right to suspend Ross for what he wrote outside the school.

"There is not a shred of evidence that he exhibited any bigotry or intolerance in class. All he advocated was for people to pray to effect their [Jews'] conversion," Christie reportedly argued.

The case involving Ross was launched by Moncton parent David Attis after the Moncton-area teacher published several books and letters widely viewed as anti-Semitic. Attis took his complaint to the New Brunswick Human Rights Commission (NBHRC), arguing that Ross' employer, the school board, failed to provide a service free of discrimination.

A one-man board appointed by the NBHRC upheld the complaint, but that decision was eventually overturned by the New Brunswick Court of Appeal.

The Supreme Court reserved judgment in the case. The case was heard by a full, nine-judge panel of the high court.

House adopts new Employment Equity Act

Scene in Ottawa

By RICHARD CLEROUX

OTTAWA — An astonishing thing happened in the House of Commons last month. And almost no one took notice. Even the news media appear to have missed the story.

An important piece of legislation Bill C-64, the Employment Equity Act, was adopted after lengthy debate.

It is aimed at "achieving equality" in federal jobs by giving four groups — women, aboriginal peoples, disabled persons and visible minorities — a better chance at competing for federal government jobs.

The new law, which still has to clear the Senate, could affect about 230,000 people on the federal payroll.

It will apply to all government departments, ministries and agencies and as well to any employer in private enterprise with 100 employees or more who wants to bid on a federal contract.

There are about 350 of these giant firms on the government's bidding lists right now.

Employers have to draw up plans to say how they will hire more people from these four groups. They have to set targets and say when they hope to achieve them. They won't be punished if they fail. But they can be fined however, up to $50,000 if they refuse to even try.

The new law extends the old Employment Equity law of 1986, which covered all federal crown corporations (things such as the CBC or the post office) and all the private firms that come under federal regulation such as banks, airlines, railways and telecommunications companies.

The old law of 1986 was working well enough, but it didn't go far enough, the government felt.

That law was the reason that in recent years, you've been seeing more visible minority faces behind the counter at your neighborhood bank, and perhaps more women nowdays in managerial positions.

Banks, in fact, are among our best employment equity employers. They are extremely conscious of their image.

The CBC responded by putting more visible minorities, aboriginal people and women on the air as hosts and guests on its television and radio shows.

The times have been changing. Ten years ago women were 40 per cent of the workforce. Today they make up about 45 per cent. That five per cent difference amounts to 750,000 more jobs — no mean accomplishment.

Unfortunately, the record for the other three groups is nowhere near as impressive. There are barely as many visible minorities or disabled people in government jobs as there were 10 years ago.

And with massive cutbacks and firings in the public service, where it's the old rule of last to be hired, first to be fired, there was a danger that the progress of the past decade will have been for nothing unless the four groups were given additional protection by the new legislation.

Women, aboriginals, the disabled and visible minorities make up about 60 per cent of people entering the workforce, which is not surprising since women alone make up just over half the population.

The government is hoping that by the year 2000 the four groups will make up about 66 per cent of the people entering the workplace.

Ironically, the federal legislation, which was promised in the Liberals' famous election Red Book, comes at a time when the new Conservative government in Ontario is moving in exactly the opposite direction.

Premier Mike Harris' government is dismantling the New Democratic Party's powerful new Employment Equity law which went into effect less than a year ago in Ontario.

So here we have two governments, both riding on a wave of popularity, each doing exactly the opposite thing. (And people tell you that all governments are the same, or that all governments just follow the herd!)

During the recent election campaign in Ontario, the Tories made employment equity a big issue. They were able to tap the resentment and anger among some white males who fear employment equity will mean they won't be able to find a job. It was a major factor in electing the Tories. When times are tough, one of the results is that people start looking out for themselves.

True to their word, the Tories recently began dismantling the NDPs Employment Equity law, a souped-up version of what the Liberals are bringing in.

The Ontario law covers all provincial firms with more than 50 employees, not 100 employees. The Ontario law covers 17,000 employers, the federal law 350 employers. There's a big difference.

Both laws included compliance — which the opponents quickly labelled the equity police. The provincial law set up a new system of quasi-judicial enforcement, while the federal law makes use of the existing Canadian Human Rights Tribunal to judge cases.

Potential seen in Nova Scotia trade with Israel

By JOEL JACOBSON
CJN Maritimes Correspondent

HALIFAX — Trade opportunities, academic cooperation and updates on the peace discussions between Israel and her Arab neighbors highlighted a recent whirlwind visit to Halifax by Israeli Consul General Daniel Gal.

Israel can benefit from Nova Scotian expertise in environment services, software production and the forestry industry, said Gal after meeting with officials of the province's Economic Renewal Agency.

"With Israel's plans to increase electrical power capabilities in the next few years, Nova Scotia can help on the consulting, design and engineering side," Gal said.

A Nova Scotia spokesperson said the trade meetings discussed ways the province could help Israel clean and recycle its water, an area where Nova Scotia has development expertise.

Currently, Nova Scotia provides $14 million in goods and services to Israel annually, while purchasing about $1 million, mostly in fruits and vegetables. The province's exports include $10 million in wood products, which could be increased as Israel's housing infrastructure continues to grow.

Provide expertise

Israel's thriving aquaculture industry can increase the flow of services to Nova Scotia as the Atlantic province is just developing its own program.

"They may be able to provide expertise in consulting or services," said the spokesperson.

"We're also prepared to receive trade delegations from Nova Scotia but must ensure Nova Scotia business people can meet their counterparts in a select field," Gal said.

Gal met with new Dalhousie University president Tom Traves, who has visited Israel and knows several professors at Hebrew University. "He's very receptive to an exchange of professors and students between Dalhousie and Israeli universities," said Gal.

The consul general to Montreal for Quebec and the Atlantic provinces also met with Nova Scotia Education and Culture Minister John MacEachern, stressing the opportunity for Israeli artists and cultural groups to expand trips to Montreal and Toronto with visits to Atlantic Canada.

Jewish values

He met with 30 senior members of the Jewish community at a Beth Israel Synagogue breakfast, and discussed the peace process with them. He stressed the importance of the agreement with Jordan as a model of a peace treaty that can be seen by other Arab nations.

While he said there was no immediate progress with Syria, the Palestinian agreement continues to go forward. "While giving autonomy to Palestinians, we are gaining more liberation for Israel. Domination is against Jewish values," he said.

He also met with editors of the Chronicle-Herald and Mail-Star in Halifax, discussing peace, economics and education.

"Tourism in Israel is up 30 per cent. With peace coming and, of course, something to offer with our vast history as the Land of the Prophets, we are an attractive destination. And with two airlines now flying out of Canada — El Al and Air Canada — there is more opportunity to travel."

He told the editors immigration has been less of a problem than in early years. "We are now finding jobs and housing for our immigrants."

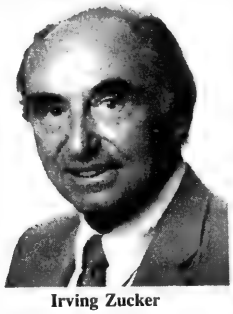
Gallery inducts arts patron

By MOURA WOLPERT
Special to The CJN

HAMILTON — Arts patron and philanthropist Irving Zucker, a businessman and former owner of a radio network in Ontario and the Maritimes, is one of five Hamiltonians to be inducted into the Hamilton Gallery of Distinction at a Nov. 15 awards dinner at the Hamilton Convention Centre.

Also being inducted are labor leader Enrico (Henry) Mancinelli; jazz musician and entertainer Jackie Washington; former soldier, businessman, historian and author, Denis Whitaker; and the late Father Sean O'Sullivan.



Irving Zucker

The Hamilton Gallery of Distinction Awards Dinner was established in 1984 to honor "present and past prominent citizens who have by their accomplishments brought credit to our community."

Previously honored members of the Hamilton Jewish community include the late Kenneth D. Soble and the late Max Enkin, as well as conductor Boris Brott and Rabbi Bernard Baskin, rabbi emeritus of Temple Anshe Sholom.

Although long known in the Jewish community for his generous support of local Jewish and Israeli causes, Zucker gained wide attention in recent years with major bequests from his extensive personal art collection both to the Art Gallery of Hamilton, which has named an area in Commonwealth Square in front of the gallery the Irvine Zucker Sculpture Court, and to McMaster University.

The 750-seat theatre in the Du Maurier Ltd. Centre for the Arts, home of Theatre Aquarius, was named the Irving Zucker Theatre when it opened in 1991, while St. Joseph's Hospital, the Hamilton Public Library and Opera Hamilton are among many other local recipients of his generosity.

Hamilton's Yeshiva Beit Yitzchak bears his name (the Irving Zucker College of Jewish Education), and Shalom Village Nursing Home has an Irving Zucker Wing.

Mancinelli, vice-president of the Laborers' International Union of North America (LIUNA), was a recipient of the State of Israel Bonds Israel Solidarity Award in 1981.

Father O'Sullivan became a staunch supporter of Israel following his visit there in 1977. Following his death from leukemia in 1989 at age 37, Hamilton's Jewish National Fund established the Sean O'Sullivan Forest in his memory.

Israel's top team takes on European opposition

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — It's amazing how many Air Mile points you get to rack up when you play hockey.

Toronto resident Oded Orgil recently returned from a European-Asian junket in which he laced up the ol' Tacks for Israel's top club team, Bat Yam Eyal.

The first Asian stop on the tour was in Ankara, Turkey, where Eyal (which means strength) competed in a qualifying tournament for the European Club Championships.

Eyal, bolstered by three Toronto-based players who hold Israeli passports, and by three ex-Soviet league players, slammed the host Turks by 15-2 and 9-6 margins.

Orgil, a stay-at-home defenceman, said the Israeli skaters coasted in the second game, for a three-goal victory.

From there, it was on to some tougher competition in Herning, Denmark, where Eyal faced top club teams from Lithuania, Estonia and Herning, which boasts ex-NHLer and Finnish mini-flash, Petri Skriko.

Unlike the tender Turks, those guys could really play well. The Israelis' first game against Herning was a tough affair, and the Danes (bolstered by Canadian and Finnish imports) held 4-2 and 5-2 period leads. In the third, Eyal ran into penalty trouble — Orgil questions some of the zebra's calls — and the boys from Bat Yam succumbed 15-2.

Game 2 was against the Estonian squad, which was loaded with ex-Russians living in the Baltic republic. It was a veteran team consisting of former Soviet first- and second-division players. Eyal lost 12-1. "We played poorly," Orgil said, in what some might consider a bit of an understatement.

The third game had them take on the Lithuanian champs and, surprisingly, Israel jumped into a 6-3 first period lead. The Lithuanians trimmed that to 6-5 after two and broke it open in the third, winning 8-6.

A lack of discipline and bad penalties cost Eyal dearly, Orgil said.

Israel's traditional hockey weaknesses — the inability to practise on large ice (Israel's only Olympic-sized rink opened a short time ago) and throwing a team together at the last minute — reduced Eyal's chances, Orgil said.

Joining Orgil as Eyal's Canadian-based reinforcements were Miron Schacham and Jojo Rusinek. In addition, one-time Soviet oleh Evgeny Gusin, Eyal's manager, president and starting goalie, recruited three ex-Soviet first division players for the team. One of them had played on the Soviet national team in 1984.

Each club team is allowed five imports, Orgil explained, though he, Shacham and Rusinek were considered Israeli members of Eyal.

Next on the agenda for the peripatetic player is participation in a qualifying tournament in Greece this January. Israel will play one game as part of an Olympic qualifying tournament and another that's part of the World Championship (C Division) qualifying rounds, Orgil explained.

Profile of an assassin

CJN News Services

JERUSALEM — Yitzhak Rabin's assassin, Yigal Amir, is the son of a rabbi, who expressed shock and disbelief at his son's act, the daily newspaper Yediot Achronot reported on the weekend.

As well, reports said, Amir was once a student at a Yemenite yeshivah and worked for the Foreign Ministry teaching Hebrew to Jews in Russia.

He was even a member of the army's elite Golani Brigade, a source of great pride for many Israelis.

Fitting the assassin's typical profile, Amir was described as quiet and and even gentle. But the picture of the 27-year-old law student that emerged is one of contrasts.

Classmates at Bar-Ilan University described him as very intelligent but who did not attend classes regularly.

He lived with his traditional parents and seven siblings in a suburb just north of Tel Aviv and was remembered as helping widows and the elderly in the neighborhood. But he reportedly used hollow-point bullets so lethal they are banned under international convention.

He was well-read, but on his bookshelf, police found a copy of The Day of the Jackal, a thriller about political assassination, and a work lauding Baruch Goldstein, the Jewish settler who gunned down 29 Muslims in Hebron last year.

Amir was described as a taciturn person who had lots of friends by one Bar-Ilan classmate. "I knew he was a little more right-wing than others, but nothing like this," she said. "He was a normal guy, an all-Israeli guy."

He was a regular at generally peaceful anti-government rallies but was connected to Eyal (The Jewish Fighters' Organization), a shadowy ultra-right Jewish group born of the outlawed Kach and Kahane Chai movements.

"I acted alone on God's orders and I have no regrets," Amir told his police interrogators, according to Israel Radio.

Police said Amir had no previous criminal record.

Said Karnei Shomron resident Avner Goldshmidt, "He was a wonderful person. I don't understand how he could do something like this."

Goldshmidt said he last saw Amir at an anti-government demonstration in Jerusalem two weeks ago, where Amir acted no differently than anyone else.

"We cannot react. We are in shock and great pain," a cousin of Amir's said Saturday night. "Please leave us alone."

One fellow student told Israel Radio that Amir grew increasingly angry over attacks by Muslim militants.

"He would say, 'We have to stick it to Rabin and his government.' This man expressed himself for quite a long time in a very extremist manner."

Indeed, weekend reports said Israeli security was warned as recently as Friday of the danger of an attack by a lone Jew against a government official.

The country's renowned security apparatus now finds itself with a nightmare on its hands.

"Heads may roll here," a police source acknowledged. "Police cannot absolve themselves of responsibility, since there were around 700 policemen and Border Police guarding the event" at which Rabin was killed.

Police will likely be subjected to an inquiry commission into how a lone gunman managed to get within two metres of Rabin.

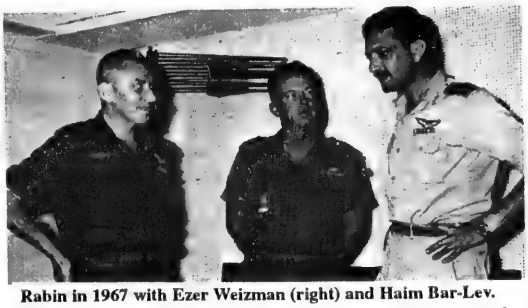
Israel Mourns: Yitzhak Rabin 1922 – 1995

Rabin: a warrior for peace

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

Soldier, diplomat, politician and statesman, Yitzhak Rabin left Israel an enduring legacy.

Assassinated last Saturday night by a Jewish extremist as he was leaving a rally in Tel Aviv, Rabin was a fighter in war and a warrior for peace.



Rabin in 1967 with Ezer Weizman (right) and Haim Bar-Lev.

MIDEAST ANALYSIS

In death, Rabin — the first native-born prime minister — will best be remembered as one of the architects of Israel's stunning victory in the Six Day War and one of the builders of its historic rapprochement with the PLO and Jordan.

A peace treaty with Syria and with Lebanon — which would have been the crowning touches of a protean career — eluded him. Nevertheless, Rabin laid the foundation of an eventual accommodation between Israel and its Arab enemies to the north.

If nothing else, Rabin — dour, doleful, cautious and reserved — was a pragmatist. No better example of this was his embrace of Israel's historic accord with the PLO.

In common with most Israeli politicians, he had demonized the PLO. But when circumstances changed, Rabin jettisoned his preconceived notions and authorized direct negotiations with the PLO. Then, when the Declaration of Principles was signed in Washington in September 1993, he shook hands with his former arch enemy, Yasser Arafat, and thereby formalized Israel's reconciliation with the Palestinians.

This process, which has divided Israel and which prompted Rabin's assassin to act, will be continued by his successor and sometime rival, Shimon Peres.

Rabin's life was a mirror image of Israel.

During the War of Independence, he was deputy commander of the Palmach, the Haganah's elite strike force. Rabin saw action on several fronts — the approaches to Jerusalem, Lod and Ramle (from where his troops expelled some 50,000 Palestinian Arabs, he recalled in his 1979 memoirs) and the Negev.

Appointed chief of staff in 1964, Rabin drew up the plans for what turned out to be the Six Day War, Israel's finest hour on the battlefield.

On the eve of that conflict, Rabin warned Syria to put an end to Palestinian infiltration of Israeli territory. Syria's ally and chief arms supplier, the Soviet Union, used that warning to float a rumor that Israel was massing troops on its northern border. The resultant tension contributed to the war fever that gripped the region.

In 1968, Rabin went to Washington as the ambassador to the United States. He helped to solidify Israel's strategic relationship with that superpower, but he committed a faux pas by suggesting that American Jews should vote for Richard Nixon, the president, in the 1972 election.

Untainted by Israel's unpreparedness in the 1973 Yom Kippur War, Rabin returned to Israel, Golda Meir having named him minister of labor in her cabinet.

After her abrupt resignation, Rabin succeeded her as prime minister, the youngest person ever to occupy the post. Working closely with Henry Kissinger, the U.S. secretary of state, Rabin signed disengagement agreements with Egypt and Syria in 1974 and 1975.

Just two years later, he was forced to step down, felled by his wife's illegal bank account in the United States.

Rabin made a comeback when the Likud and the Labor party formed a national unity government in 1984. He served as defence minister until 1990, ordering the air raid on PLO headquarters near Tunis, withdrawing from much of southern Lebanon, scrapping the Lavi airplane project and dealing with the intifadah, the Palestinian revolt in the territories.

Defeating Peres as Labor party leader in 1992, Rabin ran a successful election campaign on a plank emphasizing territorial compromise.

Succeeding the Likud's Yitzhak Shamir as premier, Rabin froze the construction of new settlements in the territories and patched up relations with Washington, which had deteriorated during the acrimonious loans guarantees debate.

Rabin gave himself six to nine months to address the Palestinian question. It took a little longer, but Israel's subsequent and heretofore undreamed of accord with the PLO opened new diplomatic vistas for Israel in the Arab world and beyond.

Rabin's policies engendered opposition and derision from the right-wing camp and, indeed, they left him physically vulnerable. But Rabin bequeathed to Israel the greatest gift — the gift of peace with its Arab neighbors.

The Week in Israel

Oct. 30

• The Middle East-North Africa Economic Conference came to a close in Amman. Among the achievements of the conference was an agreement to found a regional development bank for the region. The bank's headquarters will be in Cairo.

• Responding to a question from Arab journalists in Amman, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres stated there will be no change in Israel's position regarding the status of united Jerusalem as Israel's capital.

Oct. 31

• Ha'aretz reported that Israel and Mauritania, a member of the Arab League, have agreed to establish diplomatic ties. Mauritania's foreign minister said regional development and stabilization are important to his country. Israel will supply Mauritania with economic and technological aid.

Nov. 1

• Kol Yisrael reported two South Lebanon Army soldiers were killed and three were wounded along with five IDF soldiers in three separate attacks carried out by Hezbollah gunmen in the Security Zone in south Lebanon.

• Two Palestinian youths shot and severely wounded Rabbi Uzi Nevo in a drive-by shooting outside Kochav Ya'acov near Ramallah. The youths commandeered a UN employee at gunpoint, stole his car and fired upon the rabbi in his car.

Nov. 2

• Two car bomb explosions in Gaza lightly injured 11 Israelis. Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin criticized the Palestinian Authority and demanded that it take responsibility to ensure that no terrorist activity is organized in territory under its control.

Nov. 3

• Kol Israel reported the movement led by Natan Sharansky will become a political party and run in next year's general elections. The movement calls for maintaining the current version of the Law of Return and conducting a referendum on the future of the peace process. The movement supports territorial compromise on the Golan Heights and opposes the establishment of a Palestinian state.

JERUSALEM 3000 EVENTS

• One thousand persons were expected in Jerusalem at the conference of Holocaust Survivor Descendants.

U.S. rabbi apologizes for words that 'caused hurt'

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

NEW YORK — In a perversely ironic twist to last Saturday's assassination of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, the Brooklyn-based rabbi who in June declared it permissible under Jewish law to kill Rabin for his pursuit of the peace process, last week issued an indirect apology and a call for Jewish unity.

"We must learn the lessons of our own history, including that when Jews turn on Jews, our Temple falls," Rabbi Abraham Hecht, president of the Orthodox Rabbinical Alliance of America, wrote in a recent letter to Rabin.

"We must speak and act toward each other as we would toward God" and "not, then, be divided in anger," he continued. "For my part, I wish to repudiate any words and actions of anger and which have caused hurt."

"I welcome this development," said Ambassador Colette Avital, Israeli consul general in New York prior to the weekend's stunning events in Israel. "No one is looking for a fight with the rabbis. I believe there is a need for a different level of discussion between religious and secular leadership."

Meanwhile, "if Rabbi Hecht has expressed his regret and retracts everything, we have no problem with this," she said.

In June, the rabbi said that by handing over Israeli land and property to Palestinians, Israeli government leaders "and all who assist them" fall into the category of moser, those who betray Jews to Gentiles.

Rabbi Hecht cited the writings of Maimonides as justification for his edict.

Avital said she believed his backtracking was motivated by a public backlash.

"I know in some cases the violent behavior of rabbis has elicited a boomerang in the Jewish community," she said.

"People felt very uncomfortable with this kind of extremist behavior."

In July, several U.S. Orthodox groups issued a statement, apparently in response to Rabbi Hecht's declaration, saying, "There can be no excuse or justification for the extremist verbal attacks directed against the elected leadership of Israel."

Israel Mourns: Yitzhak Rabin 1922 – 1995

'The assassin is from within'

these are an effort to find some meaning for an incomprehensible act, but they will do little to start the healing process that must follow the grieving of the days ahead.

Yigal Amir apparently planned and executed the heinous act on his own thereby introducing an unprecedented element into the political culture of Israel. However, he did so against an exceptional national debate that has broken new ground in the stridency of its tone and content. Indeed, the issues at stake are unrivaled for this generation, and perhaps for all Israelis since the debate over acceptance of the 1947 UN Partition Plan.

It is facile to argue the context of the debate inevitably led to last night's events. But it is equally facile to ignore it. By isolating Amir's action and pretending that there was no context, Israelis will have little incentive to undertake the necessary re-evaluation of the principles of their national debate. "Where are we living?" sobbed a young Israeli after the shooting. Every society has its extremist fringe, but Israelis felt immune to such violent action. Not any more.

By next week, the political machinery will have swung back into gear. President Ezer Weizman will officially appoint a new head of government -- probably from Labor if their parliamentary majority will hold. Then, Labor and Likud will reassess their chances in the election which has to take place by next November.

In 1992 Rabin brought victory to Labor because he combined an impeccable career as a soldier with a commitment to the new opportunities for peace he saw for his nation. No other single politician combines these qualities in quite the same way. Will Israelis rally with a renewed commitment to Rabin's way despite his loss, or will the hesitations of many Israelis increase without his leadership?

Will Shimon Peres lead the party into the next election or will he share the limelight with former chief of staff Ehud Barak? Such questions are uppermost in the minds of political pundits from around the world as they focus on what is to them the latest flash point. But to Israelis, because the assassin is from within, these questions will take second place to the profound and difficult reflections on identity, community and civility. When Rabin was gunned down, Israel lost its innocence forever. It will never be the same.

Rabin is laid to rest

more terribly, for he has taken our Yitzhak.

"Israel's covenant with God for freedom, security, tolerance and peace ... was the covenant that was Prime Minister Rabin's lifework. Now we must make it his lasting legacy."

Clinton ended his eulogy by reciting, in Aramaic, the last line of the Kaddish, the prayer for the dead, and saying goodbye to his chaver, friend.

In other addresses, Peres said the bullets that struck down Rabin will not extinguish his dream of peace. "You didn't leave a will and testament but you left us with a command, to continue for peace.

"I see our neighbors, the Arabs, and I wish to say to them that the peace is irreversible ... And we are unable to stop or hesitate. It will encompass us and our women and children."

Mubarak urged the Mideast neighbors to "redouble and reaffirm our obligation to continue the sacred mission to achieve a just and lasting peace. We must deprive those treacherous hands from reaping the rewards of their vile actions. Only through our unwavering commitment to this objective can we truly honor the memory of this fallen hero of peace."

In his remarks, King Hussein recalled that Rabin "lived as a soldier [and] died as a soldier for peace. And I believe it's time for all of us to come out openly and to speak of peace. Not here today, but for all the times to come. We belong to the camp of peace. We believe in peace."

Eitan Haber, director of Israel's Prime Minister's Office, recalled how the doctors and nurses who worked to save Rabin's life came to him in tears with a copy of the bloodstained paper that was in Rabin's breast pocket. They were the words of the song of peace that Rabin had sung moments before being gunned down.

"Your blood covers the words and your blood which oozed from your body has covered these words and angrily calls through the words and the lines," he said.

Representatives of more than 86 countries attended the service. Among them were Prime Minister Jean Chretien, former U.S. presidents George Bush and Jimmy Carter, Moroccan Prime Minister Abdul Afif Filali, Prince Charles of Britain, British Prime Minister John Major, German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, Russian Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin, UN Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali, French President Jacques Chirac and Turkish Prime Minister Tancu Ciller.

Ministers of Oman and Qatar, two Persian Gulf states that do not have official diplomatic relations with Israel, also attended.

Israel Mourns: Yitzhak Rabin 1922 – 1995

Learning from our history

By GERALD STEINBERG
Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

Leah Rabin is comforted by her son

TEL AVIV — The assassination of Yitzhak Rabin painfully demonstrated that the future of Israel and the Jewish people will not be determined by external borders, but by our internal cohesion as a people and a nation.

For too many years, we have focused our whole attention on the outside threat: on armies and missiles, boundaries and treaties. Since 1991, left wing and right wing, Labor and Likud, religious and secular leaders and communities have invested all their energies in the negotiation process. All other spheres of social and political activity were neglected.

Israelis have seen the Oslo 2 agreement, marking the beginning of Israeli withdrawal from cities of Judea and Samaria, as the sole factor that will determine Israel's future.

Opponents argued that the agreement would bring disaster, that it would mark the end of the Jewish state. Proponents spoke in messianic terms, viewing Oslo 2 as the critical step in the creation of a New Middle East, and a guarantee of Israeli survival.

This process is important, but is not the only issue of significance, and not the most critical one.

Militarily, Israel will be able to survive with or without a Palestinian state, within whatever boundaries are determined. What is not clear is whether we have the ability to live with each other as Jews in a Jewish state, with tolerance and a sense of community.

For thousands of years, the course of Jewish history has often been determined by the degree of Jewish unity or conflict, but it seems that we have learned little from our own history.

According to Jewish tradition, a few months after the destruction of the First Temple in 586 BCE, Gedaliah Ben Ahikam, the governor of Judah, was assassinated by a rival, and the remnants of Judah were exiled. The day of this assassination is still commemorated by a fast day. Six centuries later, the Second Temple was destroyed and the Jewish people were exiled for 2,000 years as a result of sinat hinam or senseless hatred.

It is not clear how much the rhetoric calling Rabin a traitor contributed to his assassination, but the atmosphere of intolerance fostered by the political leadership on all sides went ignored for too long.

While the gunshots that killed the prime minister seem truly to have shocked educators and the religious leadership, for many years these very people failed to act strongly to counter the political and social hatred and violence that has become so prevalent in Israeli society.

The rabbinical establishments in both Israel and the Diaspora have devoted most of their attention to politics and the question of boundaries and control of the land. They have ignored or dismissed the vast majority of secular Israelis, unable to speak their language, or understand their concerns or needs. It would not be an exaggeration to say that many have abandoned the fundamental issues of Jewish education and Jewish values for politics.

The essential objective of the Zionist movement and the reestablishment of Jewish sovereignty is not merely the physical survival of the Jewish people. Political and military independence is not an end in itself, but rather the necessary prerequisite for a Jewish renaissance, for a rebuilding of Jewish culture and community that has been steadily eroded by insecurity and a powerful secular society encroaching from all directions.

But instead of promoting this process of rebuilding, we have created a society that is split between nihilist secularists and religious exclusivity.

At this critical point in our history, we are in desperate need of careful and wise political leadership, as well as educators and religious leaders able to leave politics to the politicians, and focus on relations between each individual and his (or her) neighbor. We need to be able to put current events and decisions in a broader historical context, and to see the opportunities and threats realistically, and not through the lens of hysteria. Unless we create a sense of community and common purpose, we are in danger of splitting apart again, after less than 50 years of independence and maturity.

Israel, Qatar ink business deal

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — The Middle East and North African Economic Summit wrapped up three days of meetings in Jordan with news that Israel had signed its first major business agreement with a Persian Gulf state.

The Amman gathering, which convened under the slogan The Middle East is Open for Business, drew 60 nations, including some 2,000 government officials and businesspeople, for a series of meetings aimed at promoting regional development projects.

A similar meeting held a year ago in Casablanca, Morocco, was a largely ceremonial affair at which Israel found itself able to mingle for the first time with Arab businesspeople in the name of an open spirit of cooperation.

But this year, the emphasis turned from symbolism to spelling out plans for cooperative projects and concluding business deals. The change was evidenced by the signing of an agreement in principle under which Qatar would sell $2 billion (US) worth of natural gas to Israel with the American energy company Enron acting as an intermediary.

Under the terms signed on the Israeli side by Energy Minister Gonen Segev, Enron will extract the gas from Qatari oil fields. Deliveries to Israel of some five million tons of natural gas are expected to begin in the year 2001. The gas shipments will initially be delivered by tanker, but officials predicted that it might ultimately be transported via a pipeline linking Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Jordan and Israel.

Segev, alluding to his country's lack of diplomatic ties with Qatar, said the gas deal had bypassed politics. He predicted that the two countries would soon establish formal relations.

During the three-day meeting, representatives from Middle East and North African nations presented proposals for projects whose costs would total more than $50 billion. Israel alone presented plans for more than 200 projects — including new rail lines, an international airport near Eilat and a "riviera" to be developed on Israeli, Jordanian and Egyptian soil near the Gulf of Eilat — whose total projected cost exceeded $20 billion.

Accord with EU delayed

BRUSSELS — Israel and the European Union have postponed to Nov. 20 the signing of an association accord that was to be formally signed recently in Luxembourg, according to an Israeli diplomatic source.

The new accord, was to have been signed last Monday by Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres at a meeting with the 15 EU foreign ministers.

But the signing ceremony was postponed because Peres was participating this week in a three-day Middle East and North African Economic Conference in the Jordanian capital of Amman.

Eye on Arts

by Bill Gladstone

Laughable Idea: Comedywood, a new comedy club, opens Nov. 21 at 800 Steeles Ave. W. at Bathurst in north Toronto. It's the brainchild of stage hypnotist Boris Cherniak and computer entrepreneur Doron Israeli. Upcoming talent includes Marc Price, Danny Martinez, Jimmy Walker and the Incredible Boris (Cherniak). 905-761-0543.

Reading of Holocaust Play: Soldat Hans Stumpf, by Toronto playwright Marion Andre, is a probing examination of the moral choices presented during the Holocaust era. A native of Poland, Andre is a well-known writer and theatre director. Reading directed by Miriam Laurence and produced as part of Holocaust Education Week. Admission free. Bloor JCC, Nov. 12, 8 p.m. 416-924-6211.

Cashing In On Cats: Nearly 100 humorous illustrations of cats belonging to celebrities such as Salman Rushdie and Boris Yeltsin are featured in Toronto artist Ronna Mogelon's illustrated book Famous People's Cats, published recently by St. Martin's Press. Cats are big business, as Mogelon knows. She's already at work on a sequel, More Famous People's Cats.

Capsule Review, Sight Unseen: Art, love, missed opportunities and being Jewish are the subjects of Sight Unseen, the remarkable kitchen drama by David Margulies at the North York Ford Centre for the Performing Arts, Studio Theatre, through Nov. 12.

American-Jewish artist Jonathan Waxman (Jack Langedijk) seems to paint from a prepackaged reality in his head rather than from life. Yet he's become so hot a commodity in the art world that collectors buy his canvases sight unseen, even before he creates them. What's wrong with the art world is also wrong with his life.

As a retrospective of his work opens in London, Jonathan visits Patricia (Ann Turnbull), the lover he abandoned 15 years earlier because she wasn't Jewish. She lives in a farmhouse north of London with her husband (Victor Ertmanis), who resents Jonathan because his wife still seems to love him.

At first, not even Jonathan understands the reason for his visit. Then he sees the portrait he painted of Patricia hanging in the living-room. There's a freshness, a vitality, about the work, which he covets for the London show. In two scenes at the gallery, he is interviewed by a German critic (Barbara Radecki) who helps us see his inconsistencies. He comes across as a postmodern Dorian Gray — corrupt, breezy, materialistic.

The play's eight scenes are presented out of natural chronology, but the effect is anything but disjointed. Superbly rendered, these gripping scenes seem to stand above time, and the drama is as sharply defined as a cubist painting by Picasso. Al Waxman directed, Janese Kane produced. 416-872-2222.

Gelber Award: Age of Extremes, Eric Hobsbawm's sweeping study of the 20th century, is the winner of this year's Lionel Gelber Prize. The $50,000 award, given annually to the outstanding book in the field of international relations, was presented to the author, a British citizen, by Nancy Gelber recently in Toronto. The prize was established by the late Canadian author and diplomat Lionel Gelber in 1989.

Caravan of Art: Fine paintings, sculptures, glass and table art created by international artists are offered for sale at Beth Tikvah's Caravan of Art, which also features music, food and live auctions. Admission is $18 on Nov. 11, from 8 p.m., and $2 on Nov. 12, from 10 to 4 p.m. 3080 Bayview Ave., between Sheppard and Finch, North York.

Laura Silberberg, 8, will represent Canada in Tokyo.

Many writers of interest to Jewish community

Authors' unique talents highlighted at Harbourfront

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to the CJN

TORONTO — Numerous writers of special interest to the Jewish community appeared recently at the Harbourfront International Festival of Authors, Toronto's pre-eminent literary event.

American Jewish writer Grace Paley, interviewed by Toronto newspaper columnist David Lewis Stein, spoke engagingly about art and politics, the two activities to which she has devoted most of her 73 years. She is known equally as an ardent antiwar campaigner, feminist and writer of exquisite short stories (anthologized by Farrar Straus Giroux as The Collected Stories).

The recent Million Man March in Washington, D.C. "may worry our Jewish hearts and hurt our feelings," she said, "but it has the Republicans and Democrats really worried — and whatever worries them must be a good thing."

Did she regret spending so much time on politics, so little on art? "For me, politics has been a great interest all my life and I'm only sorry I did too little," she said. "I'm not sorry I didn't work more; I'm sorry I didn't write more politically."

Among the writers who influenced her, she credited James Joyce, Gertrude Stein and especially W.H. Auden for having the greatest effect.

Hailed as one of the most important literary voices to come out of Latin America, Ariel Dorfman, born in Argentina in 1942, is a Chilean citizen who was forced into exile after the 1973 coup that overthrew Salvador Allende.

"When Allende became president of the country, something very special happened in our lives," Dorfman recalled.

"Everyday people found they were able to change the world. It's such an extraordinary concept ... very few people can feel they can change the world. The world does not have to be the way it is," he said. "People don't have to live in fear; we can change the world. That experience was absolutely fundamental to me."

After the coup ended Allende's democratic revolution, "I couldn't write for 2½ years, I was so filled with remorse and sorrow," he said.

The author of titles such as Death and the Maiden and the recent Konfidenz said he sees the world "as a struggle between stories," many of which are suppressed by dictators who impose their own realities upon the masses.

"If I'm proud, it's because I've provided some spaces for these stories to tell themselves," he said. "After 20 to 30 years of writing, I've found I can be as complex as I am, yet as clear and simple as a story requires."

Australian novelist Thomas Keneally, 50, is not Jewish, but he has increased public awareness of the Holocaust through his 1982 novel Schindler's Ark, which won the Booker Prize and which Steven Spielberg translated to the screen as Schindler's List. To date, the book has sold more than two million copies, making it by far the most popular of Keneally's roughly 20 novels.

"Coming from Australia, I never understood the power of anti-Semitism," he said, calling it an "illusory passion" that requires neither a rational reason nor the presence of Jews to exist.

"Some of the strongest haters of Jews are in areas like Montana, Idaho and Washington, where there are no Jews. These people may have never met a Jew, yet they hate them."

Anti-Semitism is "a moveable feast," he said. "People claim the Jews are behind both the Bolshevik and the capitalistic conspiracies. Luther blamed them for carrying the bubonic plague ... When it was shown that bubonic plague is caused by bacteria, people made up another reason to hate."

For Keneally and his readers, Oskar Schindler has been "the lens through which we can look at the Holocaust." Researching the book "was appalling," he said, "because I never knew that people could perform such horrors on each other."

A drama of human passions

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

Claude Lelouch's three-hour epic, Les Miserables, melds human suffering down through the ages. Victor Hugo's picaresque novel strongly inspired this film, which moves easily between the 19th and 20th centuries, with the Holocaust as its throbbing subtext.

At first glance, this seems like an unlikely combination. But for the most part, Les Miserables works as a drama of human passions.

Now playing in Toronto, Les Miserables turns on Henri Fortin (Jean-Paul Belmondo), a boxer in World War I and a furniture mover during the Nazi occupation of France.

Fortin, illiterate, kind-hearted and slightly shady, models himself after Jean Valjean, the hero of Hugo's novel. With his craggy face and subtle gestures, Belmondo is Fortin incarnate.

Fortin's humanity is put to the test when a well-off Parisian Jewish family, desperate to escape to safety into Switzerland, hires him to take them to the Swiss border.

The family in question consists of Andre Zemans (Michel Boujenah), a successful lawyer, his wife (Alessandra Martines), a ballet dancer and Catholic convert to Judaism, and their daughter, whom they leave behind in a school, disguised as a Catholic.

Fortin keeps his end of the bargain, but a French guide who is supposed to lead the Zemans and a group of other Jews across the border callously betrays them. Andre is shot, while his wife is taken into captivity.

Miraculously, Andre is rescued from certain death by a farmer and his wife, who nurse him back to health. The relationship, initially based on altruism, deteriorates as money changes hands and as the farmer accuses his spouse of carrying on an adulterous affair with Andre.

Eventually, the farmers milk Andre for all he is worth, concealing from him the news that the war is over and leaving the impression that he may be the last surviving Jew in all of Nazi-occupied France.

In these scenes, Lelouche suggests that even the least anti-Semitic French Christians are capable of committing dark and dasdardly deeds. It is an idea which permeates the movie.

As Andre's fate is left hanging in the balance, Les Miserables deftly switches focus, panning on the imminent dangers that confront his wife and his daughter.

Fortin holds the film together. Far from perfect, he joins the ranks of a criminal gang which robs trains and the empty homes of Jewish deportees. Later, as the Allied invasion of Normandy approaches, he has a near-fatal brush with a collaborator, a venal member of the French police, whose forte is the hunting down of hapless Jews.

Lelouche, who is best known for A Man and a Woman, not only juggles these disparate situations skillfully, but artfully weaves the thread of Hugo's sweeping novel into the fabric of Vichy France.

Les Miserables is too long by about an hour, but this hardly damages its integrity, power or majesty, much of which is encapsulated in an emotionally charged scene toward the denouement when Andre is blissfully reunited with his family.

In short, this is a film that should be on virtually everyone's must-see list.

Television documentaries pique viewers' interest

By JOSEPH SERGE
TAB news editor

TORONTO – CBC Television is running two documentaries of interest this week.

Today (Nov.9) at 7:30 p.m. Man Alive presents Hotel Cuba. Hotel Cuba is the Cuban Jews' affectionate name for Cuba which opened its doors and gave Jews sanctuary during the initial stage of the Holocaust and before.

The program explores the lives of the Jews of Havana today; one of the oldest Jewish communities in the Americas. It introduces the viewer to Cuban Jews of different generations – the children of those who fled Eastern Europe in the '20s; those that survived the Holocaust and their children; and the young Jews of today.

The program visits Havana's Jewish Community Centre for Pesach and for the centre's production of The Diary of Anne Frank.

On The Passionate Eye Nov. 12 at 8p.m., CBC presents No Need For A Gun, a stark look at Beersheva Prison.

The show focuses on the six months following the arrival of the new warden, Shlomo Tweezer, a progressive looking to make the prison more of a rehabilitative centre than a place for punishment. He believes the best way to run a prison is by creating ongoing dialogue with the inmates.

We see him offer to be a witness for one inmate, a con artist Amnon, who wants to marry a policewoman and be rehabilitated after 17 years in prison.

Tweezer gives counsel and tries to befriend one inmate, a masochist who slashes his body with blades he hides in "pockets" in his throat.

Not for everyone's tastes, No Need For A Gun , offers a grim but optimistic look inside the desert prison dubbed "a living hell" by its inmates.

Dear Jesse,

I was always very independent and now I'm frightened.

My career was the central part of my life. I never married and was quite happy to dedicate myself to the company president for whom I was secretary. Well, by the time I turned 65, computers and younger people took over and my job changed so much that when I was 72 years old they did not need me anymore, so I quit.

My income and capital allowed me to move into a very nice seniors residence where I have a beautiful large apartment. Finally, I have friends. Ten years later, my capital has dwindled and I think that if I live longer than another year, I will have to move. I don't think I have the strength.

M. J.

Dear M. J.,

Discuss your problem with the management of the residence now. Perhaps a smaller apartment might be available for less money. Speak to a financial advisor who might help you invest the rest of your capital and set up a budget that would be more manageable.

In the meantime contact a social worker in your community's service network who will help you investigate alternative housing and provide you with the support you need in the event that you have to move. Now that you have socialized with others the next time it will be easier to find new friends while keeping in touch with your other buddies.

Readers are invited to send any questions they have for Jesse to The CJN. Jesse is the executive director of Jewish Support Services for the Elderly (JSSE) in Montreal.

Israel still in shock

A SKATER'S TRIBUTE

Israeli skater Misha Shmerkin is seen here in silent tribute to Yitzhak Rabin. Shmerkin had just received word of Rabin's assassination before starting his skate last week in the Sun Life Skate Canada in Saint John, N.B. At his left is Yossi Goldberg, mayor of Metulla. The Israeli flag at half mast is paraded in honor of Shmerkin's second place finish. [photo by David Nickerson Saint John Telegraph Journal]

TEL AVIV — Five days after the murder of Yitzhak Rabin, Israelis sat transfixed, listening to the mother of the killer try to explain the unexplainable.

"He came out of my womb. But he is no longer my son," said Geula Amir on nationwide television. "It will stay with me to the grave – the pain and the fear about what can happen to a human being whom you have raised and given the very best basis possible."

The words of the kindergarten teacher from Herzliyah were haunting because they echoed the thoughts of so many Israelis. "How could he have come out of our womb? How could our society have produced such a deformed son? And how could he have lived in our house – the House of Israel – for so long without us noticing that something was terribly wrong?"

Some shook their heads in disbelief as they heard Geula Amir say she didn't know what her son was plotting. "How could the parents not know?" asked a Ramat Aviv woman. "Their son had stockpiled ammunition in the backyard. It was right under their noses!" she said outraged at the denial.

But other Israelis were simply dumbfounded as they watched the repeat of another broadcast – first televised two months ago – exposing an extreme right-wing group conducting military exercises and vowing to kill "whoever needs to be killed."

"How could we not have known? They were in our backyard," said another Ramat Aviv woman. We just didn't want to see it."

The questions become more disturbing with every new arrest. Seven suspects are now being held for involvement in the assassination of the prime minister. In every one of them, Israelis see another boy next door: a soldier in an elite army

A young man's cri de coeur

By ILAN GEWURZ
Special to The CJN

As Jewish communities the world over mourn the horrifying death of Yitzhak Rabin, the first assassination of an Israeli prime minister, Jewish youth must begin a period of soul searching and reflection on its future. The assassination of an Israeli prime minister by an Israeli has always been beyond the imagination and its tragic occurrence is more than just a breach of the democratic values of the country.

This unfathomable act goes beyond the repulsive total disregard for human life; it undermines the very essence of the State of Israel and the Jewish people. By making the unthinkable a sad reality, by transforming the ideological divisions of Jews from shouting to shooting, the abomination has forced us to reflect on where the Jewish state is heading and what it means to us as young Diaspora Jews.

Israel mourns

Throughout the last 48 years, Israel has been a source of great pride for Jews around the world. Israel is not just the realization of Jewish self-determination after 2,000 years of exile, it is the only state in the world that has managed to exist as a democracy in the face of challenges that have constantly threatened its very existence. Identification with Israel, however, goes beyond its democratic nature. The State of Israel has always represented the unity of the Jewish people. Throughout its brief history, Israel has proven time and time again that in times of crisis, political differences can be transcended for the sake of national unity.

There is a belief that no matter how deep the divide between individuals, Israel is able to exist by virtue of the fact that, at the core of their very existence, Jews all over the world (inside and outside of Israel) have always united around the Jewish state. Israelis have been more than just citizens of their country; they are seen as one big extended family. This sense of communal identity has been threatened by the horrifying reality of the recent tragedy that undermines the essential quality of the State of Israel and calls many of these ideas into question for the first time.

Ours is a generation that never experienced the horrors of the Holocaust. We never knew life in the Diaspora without existence of a Jewish state. We did not experience the overwhelming sense

Israel Mourns: Yitzhak Rabin 1922 – 1995

Letters

A flood of letters about the assassination of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin have come in. Our space does not allow us to print them all. We aplogize to the writers concerned.

His first and only song

There is a special bird in the animal kingdom called the trumpeter swan who never sings in its entire life except once just prior to its death. Mr. Shimon Peres has described for us how Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin never felt comfortable singing and so he never did — except this one time at the Peace Rally in Tel Aviv last week. He sang a peace song. After this noble swan, this king of peace in Israel finished his song, he walked to where his killer was waiting to hunt him down.

Rabbis must respond

The tragic killing of Prime Minister Rabin must be condemned by all Jews in Israel and abroad. Those Jews who, like the assassin, support or condone the killing as a necessary step sanctioned by "G-d," must be alluding to a different deity. The Jewish G-d does not instruct our people to kill. If anything, other than in cases of immediate and personal peril, we are committed not to kill.

The death of Rabin leaves Israel potentially divided but more importantly, may result in destructive turmoil within our religion. It is therefore imperative that our rabbis unite in reaffirming Judaism's commitment to our commandments and firmly denounce this recent heinous and irreligious act.

Killer shames all Jews

Attacks on the Jews provoke outrage. How many of us were appalled by Jaques Parizeau's cretinous analysis of the referendum results? Angered by the "jokes" of the CHUM announcer? Such reactions are justified responses to our collective ill-treatment and we respond in solidarity. But how to respond now?

Had Rabin been assassinated by a non-Jew we should have been outraged. But I ask you what is the appropriate response to the slaying of Rabin by one of us? How can we ever come to terms with a Jew murdering a Jew? There have been differences and difficulties; these notwithstanding, don't we all know that a Jew is a Jew is a Jew? The answer is tragically apparent.

The diplomacy demonstrated by Rabin during the Gulf War was something that we could all take pride in. When Israel had every right to retaliate, every right to participate in a game of brinkmanship that might easily have led to a nuclear holocaust, she showed restraint and wisdom. We were a distinguished nation. Under the leadership of Rabin, Israel gained the respect of the world. But as we collectively enjoyed that admiration, we now must collectively regret. The criminal death of this great man and leader has brought us shame. Shame on all of us.

Memorial comment shocks

The recent tragedy in Israel has shocked and angered many of us. As a university student deeply attached to and concerned about Israel, I found the news of Yitzhak Rabin's murder very painful and confusing.

I attended the memorial service at the Shaar Hashamayim to show my respect and to share my sadness with my community. Even on such an occasion, I experienced ignorance and lack of respect similar to that demonstrated by Rabin's killer, although to a lesser degree.

Among the dignitaries present was M. Bernard Landry. When his name was mentioned as among those present, the man (I will not say gentleman) beside me muttered, "He can rot in hell."

It made me sick to hear this comment, especially when we were supposed to be mourning the loss of a great man, killed simply because of his political views. Not only was this remark inappropriate, but it also shows that many people feel those who do not share their views deserve to die.

My message to people like this man and to all those despicable people who say that Rabin "deserved" to die, is first, get an education because you obviously have not learned to be civilized and second, being a good Jew means respecting others, regardless of their views. It is people such as this intolerant man who stand in the way of world peace! I can only hope that my children will not have to share the world with people like him!

Shalom Bayit above all

Yitzhak Rabin, father of peace, teacher of compatibility and humility, leader in the fight for understanding, a man of great wisdom and foresight, is dead.

I cannot begin yet to get angry. I am too caught up in the pain of the moment. I am too shocked to hear that another Jew has violated not only the law of the land but the law of the Bible. And it is hurtful, embarrassing and terrifying to know that this Jew is not upset, nor regretful of his deed. Possibly, if it was a person of another faith, a son or daughter of a former enemy of Israel, who had shot down Rabin, then I could feel some anger mixed with my pain.

But this is not the case. And instead I feel lost.

The only consolation, perhaps, is that in Rabin's death, we see that peace is worth dying for. That Shalom Bayit is truly so important a mitzvah we should put it above all our other responsibilities. That though we may be kosher, go to shul regularly and make charitable contributions, these acts pale in comparison to our behavior toward others. That though it may be difficult, we should curb our tendencies to disagree and instead work toward being better human beings, peaceful human beings. We should strive toward teaching our children, our families, our friends and our communities that working out our differences is the only everlasting memorial.

Unity as Rabin's legacy

A hero is all the time a hero. It has nothing to do with whether he or she is of Indian, Greek, English or Jewish origin.

Yitzhak Rabin believed that people during peace time could develop their potential to full.

I hope his innocent blood brings the very foundation of peace, harmony and happiness to every individual and to every country. I hope also that his innocent blood unites all the Jewish people who live either in Israel or in the Diaspora and helps them to forget problems of minor political differences for the grandeur and glory of their country.

Civil discourse needed

In the wake of the assassination of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin by a Jewish religious nationalist in Israel, isn't it time that the rhetoric in Canadian religious nationalist circles stayed quiet about internal Israeli politics?

The speakers and leaders of the religious nationalist settlers' movement cannot absolve themselves of responsibility by innocently claiming that Yigal Amir was a lunatic, a crazy.

Surely now is the time for a civil discourse on the issues of peace in Israel, the dilemma of the settlements and the future of Israel. A debate about politics naturally produces disagreements, not a defiance of the government, not a motive for murder.

Thousands mourn slain Israeli Prime Minister

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Some came to express their solidarity with the people of Israel, others came searching for an outlet for their grief. Yet others came to pay their respects to Yitzhak Rabin.

More than 5,000 people, young and old, adults, seniors, mothers with babies, packed the North York Centennial Arena last week for a program sponsored by a coalition of Jewish organizations. Hundreds more listened to the service in a nearby library or stood outside the rink.

Those present in bleachers usually reserved for hockey fans and those on chairs at ice level heard a parade of speakers eulogize the slain Israeli leader, though none could capture the emotion and sense of loss expressed at Rabin's Jerusalem funeral.

On the floor of the cavernous arena, 19-year-old Arik Bergman told The CJN that as an Israeli "I felt personally connected to what happened. I felt numb, shocked that it was done by a Jew. It's not something we're used to.

"I think this [program] is a way to unite, to feel together and to get together with other Jews in the community who feel the same way," the University of Toronto student said.

Paula Bernstein said she attended the program "to show my solidarity with the state of Israel and to mourn the loss of our leader."

Bernstein, a real estate agent, said "I was shocked, saddened and horrified that this crime was committed by one of our own."

Eran Feldman, a 26-year-old sabra, said he voted for Rabin in the last Israeli election. "I believe in the way of peace because during the intifadah I served [in the IDF] among the Arabs and it wasn't easy. I think the time has come to do something because [this struggle] doesn't lead to anything. We don't want the Arabs as our citizens so the only way is to separate."

Feldman said the killing of Rabin was "craziness. I know there is a struggle in the country, but not in this way."

Asher Benlolo, 48, came to the memorial service "because Rabin was my leader in the army. I served under him directly. He was a great man, the man who started the peace."

Robert Vardi, a native of Hungary who lived in Israel for 24 years, said he attended the service because "we have to pay our respects to a great man. After I was up all night to watch the funeral, it was the least I could do to come here tonight.

"I lit a memorial candle for him in my home. I cried when I saw the funeral service," said Vardi, who in 1950 served in the IDF as a paratrooper.

Enid and Harold Alter were up at 5 a.m. to watch Rabin's funeral live on television. "We're here [at the rally] to show our respect for Mr. Rabin," Enid said.

"This is a terrible shock," particularly because it's "a time that Israel needs a strong leader," Harold said.

Addressing the thousands present, Rabbi Gunther Plaut paid tribute to Rabin the peacemaker. And he attacked the mindset that led the assassin to snuff out the prime minister's life.

Referring to the Akedah story in the Torah in which Abraham was ready to sacrifice his son Yitzhak in obedience to God's commands, Rabbi Plaut said "the assassin thought he too had heard God, but in his blindness he did not see the ram in the bushes." (In the Akedah, an angel appeared to Abraham and told him to sacrifice the ram in place of his son.)

The assassin "took the voice of hate as the voice of God."

The assassin did not believe in the principles of democracy, of listening to the views of others. Instead he opted for violence, Rabbi Plaut said.

The assassin also did not understand the principles of Judaism as found in the Talmud, a compendium of argument and counterargument. Both side of a questions asked in a sacred cause are the voices of the living God, Rabbi Plaut said.

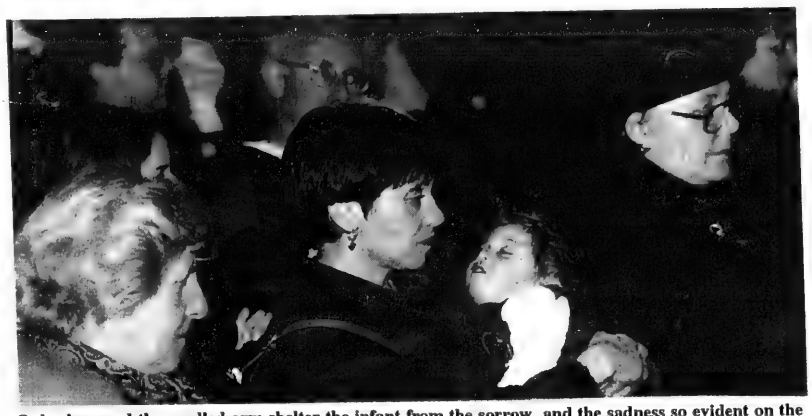
What kind of voices call an Israeli prime minister a murderer and a traitor? It was inevitable that someone would take these voices literally, he added.

Rabbi Plaut suggested that Jews in the Diaspora are also too prone to use violent, divisive language.

"Whether we as a people will live is up to God, but whether we live together as one people is up to us," he concluded.

Other addressing the meeting included former Ontario premier Bob Rae, North York Mayor Mel Lastman, Israeli Consul General Jehudi Kinar and representatives of various Jewish organizations.

The meeting was sponsored by Canadian Jewish Congress, Ontario region, B'nai Brith Canada, the Canadian Zionist Federation, the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto and the United Israel Appeal of Canada. Moshe Ronen, Ontario chair of Congress, chaired the proceedings.



Only sleep and the cradled arm shelter the infant from the sorrow and the sadness so evident on the faces of the people who gathered at the memorial service. [Paul Lungen photo]

Yitzhak Rabin gave detail to Jewish history

Not many people know that Leon Uris based the character of Ari Ben Canaan in the novel Exodus, in part, on the life of Yitzhak Rabin. Such were young Rabin's contributions to the founding of the State of Israel that Uris knew he had the material to fashion a true-to-life hero from the Haganah and Palmach officer's exploits. Such was the remarkable nature of the story of the Jewish people's return to modern history that he also knew he could write a best-selling novel. And of course, he was right.

Exodus was not a classic of western literature, but it became an immediate hit. First published in 1958, it had already gone into its 28th printing by 1965. Uris himself attributed the novel's success to its subject matter.

"It was the story of the greatest miracle of our times, an event unparalleled in the history of mankind: the rebirth of a nation which had been dispersed 2,000 years before. It tells the story of the Jews coming back after centuries of abuse, indignities, torture and murder to carve an oasis in the sand with guts and with blood ... Exodus is about fighting people, people who do not apologize either for being born Jews or the right to live in human dignity."

As everyone knows, the novel was subsequently made into a film with Paul Newman starring as the hard-nosed, courageous sabra.. It is probably accurate to say that by the mid-1960s, most North Americans and Europeans had either read the book or seen the movie. This was very significant.

To the generation which had lived through World War II, Exodus provided a written and visual record, albeit fictionalized, of their struggle, of the ashes of destroyed European Jewry and of the tiny phoenix that arose miraculously from them.

To the first generation born after the war, at a time when their parents the survivors still could not speak, when most universities were not offering programs in Jewish studies, when life was fraught with relatively few moral ambiguities, Exodus was an eye-opening education and a soaring inspiration. It helped shape an entire generation's sentiment and galvanize its steel support for the nascent Israel, the concrete expressions of which reached their deepest level during the Six Day War.

So gripping was the story told that Exodus became a secret talisman shared in whispers among the oppressed Jews in the Soviet Union, their chief instructional instrument on modern Jewish history and introductory spiritual link to both Judaism and Israel. As Wendy Eisen points out in her recently published book Count Us In, "There were three different handwritten Russian versions in Riga alone, each translated by a different group, unaware of the others' existence. Exodus became known as "the book," read in a single night by candle-light and passed from parent to child." During the height of the refusenik repression, its mere possession was used in court by the regime as evidence of anti-Soviet activities.

The purpose of these thoughts is not to extol Exodus as a work, but rather Exodus as a story. It was part of the profoundly moving, transformative experience faced by the post- World War II generation as we encountered and sorted out our Jewish role in the modern world. It was part of a transformative experience which Ilan Gewurz on the front page of this issue eloquently decries as sadly lacking for the second and third generations after World War II.

The story of Yitzhak Rabin gave rich detail to the founding of modern Israel and to the unfolding of Jewish history. In many respects it was a shared history.

His murder was an affront to life, law, decency and God. But it was also an affront to Jewish history. One should not have to read Exodus to understand this truth.

For at least one person, and possibly more, truth was apparently irrelevant.

The murder of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin unleashed a torrent of emotions among the readers of The CJN and an obvious need on their part to express their feelings on paper. We have received scores of letters. Like waves incessantly returning to the shoreline, they arrived by ordinary mail, electronic mail, courier and fax, a heart-rending whirl of melancholy and anger. There was prose, poetry and even drawing. As of this writing, they are still coming. We will do our best to publish as many as possible.

Multicultural groups express sympathy with the Jewish community

TORONTO — Multicultural groups from A to Z have expressed their sympathy with the Jewish community on the loss of Yitzhak Rabin.

Canadian Jewish Congress has received numerous letters of sympathy, said Congress spokesperson Lewis Levendel.

Among the groups offering their condolences: the Ukrainian Canadian Congress, the Armenian Community Centre, Christian-Jewish Dialogue of Toronto, International Coordinating Committee for Justice for Cyprus, Canadian-Croatian Congress, National Congress of Italian Canadians, Canadian Hispanic Congress and the World Sikh Organization.

Correction

The headline over the article on page 3 last week incorrectly identified Prime Minister Rabin's burial place as Mount Zion. He was buried, of course, on Mount Herzl, as the story accurately noted.

Correction

In the photo that accompanied our story last week about the joint exhibit by Israeli and Palestinian artists, we incorrectly identified Mr. Alberto DiGiovanni of the Columbus Centre as Israeli Consul General Jehudi Kinar. We regret the error.

Tributes

Canadian Jewish Leaders

OTTAWA — We are delivering this message to the Canadian Jewish community after having attended the sombre and moving funeral and tribute for Yitzhak Rabin Z"L.

Our delegation was seated among heads of state representing 80 nations.

We were moved to tears as we shared the overwhelming grief of all Israelis.

Our delegation was led by Prime Minister and Mrs. Jean Chretien, who graciously extended the hospitality of Canadian Forces transport No. 1 to us. In Israel, Canadian Ambassador David Berger and his gracious wife Monica welcomed us at the airport and at their residence. We were also accompanied by the Honorable Sheila Finestone, Quebec Cultural Communities Minister Louise Harel, and Lester Lazarus, former president of Montreal's FEDERATION CJA.

We were impressed that Prime Minister Rabin's accomplishments were lauded by Israel's former foes: King Hussein of Jordan; President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt; Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin of the Russian Federation; Boutros-Boutros Ghali, Secretary-General of the United Nations.

We came to Israel representing Canadian Jewry; to offer our condolences and sympathies to the family of Yitzhak Rabin and the Israeli people to pay our respects to a great man, a great Israeli, a great Jew; and to demonstrate Canadian Jewry's solidarity with the people and government of Israel.

Yitzhak Rabin's legacy is peace in the Middle East. We hope and pray his vision will last forever.

Don Cousens
Mayor of Markham

MARKHAM, Ont. — I join with the people of Israel and the children of Israel around the world in mourning the loss of Yitzhak Rabin. I add my voice to the chorus of those who praise Yitzhak Rabin as a man who contributed so much to world peace, and who now has made the ultimate and final sacrifice.

In my 10 years on the Soviet Jewry committee at the Ontario Legislature, and as a recipient of the Jerusalem Medal, I have developed what I feel is a special relationship with Israel and the world Jewish community. So I am doubly stricken at the loss of a world leader through senseless violence. The very existence of the State of Israel shows us that we can and should resolve our differences without recourse to violence. We cannot let the work and ideals of Yitzhak Rabin fail because of the disease of violence.

It is my sincere hope that the words and actions of world leaders over the past days will continue, and will be translated into action. The best thing we can all do is keep alive the spirit of Yitzhak Rabin as we work for the peace that he wanted for Israel, the Mideast and the world.

Aloysius Ambrozic
Archbishop of Toronto

TORONTO — I want to express my deepest condolences at the unspeakable loss of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

This man lived at the service of his people; his legacy is one of a process reaching toward a constructive, well-grounded and just peace.

I pray that his legacy will endure in the hearts and in the actions of all Israeli citizens and of all others in the Middle East. May his example continue to inspire leaders all over the world to find ways in which diverse populations can live together in fraternity and in a peace which is secure and fruitful for all.

David Dingwall, MP

OTTAWA — The Honorable David Dingwall, Minister of Public Works and Government Services Canada and Minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency expressed great dismay and sorrow over the death of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

"It was with great sadness and shock that I learned of the death of Mr. Yitzhak Rabin. The world has lost a martyr for peace. I am confident that Mr. Shimon Peres will be able to carry on in honor and memory of the efforts of Yitzhak Rabin and optimistic that the path of peace upon which he embarked will endure."

Canadian Council for Reform Judaism

TORONTO — The world is once again heartsick at an act of senseless violence that has a man of peace from our midst. On behalf of the Reform Jewish movement and Jews everywhere, we express our deepest sorrow over the act. To our brothers and sisters grieving in Israel, know that we are with you. And to Prime Minister Rabin's family, know that we mourn with you, and extend to you our deepest sympathies.

Sadly, the enemies of peace and the destroyers of life come in all colors, in all nationalities, and from all extremes. Sadly, our own people are not immune to extremists, to fanatics, yes, even to murderers. Yet just as those who assassinated Anwar Sadat 14 years ago did not stall the massive momentum for peace then, so we are confident that the peace process has not died with Prime Minister Rabin.

The desire and the momentum for peace is shared by most Israelis; it does not depend on any one individual. It rests, instead, on the shoulders of soldiers weary of fighting, mothers and fathers tired of crying, people yearning for reconciliation. Prime Minister Rabin will now join those heroes who have sacrificed their lives for peace. Our own commitment to the peace process he so courageously led is the proper respect we owe him now.

Statement made in the House of Commons, Nov. 6, 1995:

Mr. Speaker:

"One who kills in the name of morality kills nothing except one's own morality."

The world has suffered the loss of a great peace maker.

Mindless violence has claimed a leader whose foresight and courage led his nation from the twisted path of endless conflict and pointed it towards the road to peace.

I was honored to nominate Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin for the Nobel Peace Prize in January 1994 and overjoyed when he was awarded that honor in December 1994.

Yitzhak Rabin was a soldier who fought for his country, but he grew to realize that the only solution was to become a soldier for peace. He survived conflict as a soldier but died as a soldier of peace.

When I met him here in Canada he promised me that he would continue to work towards a lasting peace.

I extend condolences to Mrs. Rabin, her family and the nation of Israel.

New Israel Fund

TORONTO — The New Israel Fund — in Israel, North America and Europe — expresses its profound sadness and distress over the assassination of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin. This heinous act is, in no small measure, a consequence of violent rhetoric that extremist opponents of the peace process have increasingly indulged in over the last two years. It represents a challenge to the very fabric of democracy in Israel as much as it does to the peace process which hundreds of thousands of Israelis were celebrating at the moment Mr. Rabin was struck down.

Under Mr. Rabin's visionary leadership, Israel took a giant step toward breaking the cycle of conflict and violence that has now tragically claimed him as a victim. The work that he so courageously undertook must be carried on. The institutions and norms of Israeli democracy must be strengthened and reinforced.

Embrace religious morality

Ever since I learned to sing Hatikvah in grade school, I have been a Zionist. By the time I graduated from university, Israel activism had become one of my primary concerns and it was natural that I would choose to spend a year at the World Union Jewish Studies Institute exploring my connection to this land. Not even two weeks into the program, the principles that I have always held close to my heart have been shaken.

My emotional response to Yitzhak Rabin's assassination was similar to that of most of the students here. The shock and disbelief that I initially felt led quickly to anger and deep sorrow. Along with most people, I was incredibly saddened by the fact that this attack came from within the community. This example of the deterioration of Israeli society led me to question the very nature of the country I had spent a great part of my life defending.

The need for a Jewish nation has always seemed self-explanatory to me, but it seems that I had never really explored what it means to have a Jewish country. One horrible crime committed by one Jew brought everything into perspective. I have realized that it is not enough for Israel to be a land inhabited and led by Jews who speak to each other in Hebrew. This alone does not make it a Jewish nation. In order for Israelis to rightfully claim that they are living in a Jewish country, they must begin to live according to the fundamental principles of Judaism.

I do not mean that every Israeli must become religious. It does not matter to me if people observe Shabbat or kashrut; those are personal decisions. What does matter is that the residents of a Jewish nation embrace the basic moral aspects of our religion. Until the residents of Israel acknowledge this, they may be living in a country inhabited by Jews, but they will not be living in a Jewish country.

The Camp is in Darkness

If Prime Minister Rabin had died of natural causes, we would still mourn his death. If Prime Minister Rabin had been killed by one insane, we would mourn his death all the more. If Prime Minister Rabin had been killed by an enemy of Israel, wishing Israel ill, we would mourn yet more. But to learn that Prime Minister Rabin died at the hands of a countryman and a fellow Jew who claimed to act in the best interests of Israel is a painful lesson indeed. And to see that the assassin killed in the name of the God of Israel is to witness a profanation of God and His Torah in the world.

Great leaders have spoken about Rabin's dedication to the path of peace. Diplomats have praised a man of arms who became a soldier of peace only after extended reflection. King Hussein said quite rightly that the prime minister was a "martyr for peace;" may the memory of the martyr be for a blessing.

Yet, other words than Hussein's ring in our ears. Noa ben Artzi said of her grandfather, "The pillar of fire [is gone from] before the camp and now the camp is in darkness." It may be that our brother, the Jew who killed our brother, acted on his own. One man pulls the trigger — but there are many others who bless the assassin in their hearts. The dark seed of Jewish terrorism has borne its bitter firstfruits.

In Israel, spokesmen from across the spectrum condemn the violence that disturbed the outgoing of the Sabbath. There is indeed room for dissent in a democracy. But how do we make room for this? What do we do when the love of hating enemies spills over into hatred for those whom we should love?

Rabbi David Rosenberg
Congregation Beth Tefilah
London, Ont.

Deal with faults openly

The tragic loss of Yitzhak Rabin represents a terrible loss to Israel and to the world. It doesn't even bother me so much that it was another Jew. We Jews are often afraid to air our dirty laundry in public because we are afraid to tarnish our image as a chosen people. That image is very hard to live up to and often does more damage than good. The truth is that we are all human and the opponents of peace can be found on all fronts.

What is truly upsetting is that every step we take forward as a society seems to be fraught with tragedy. History records that people with dreams in them end up with bullets in them. In a society so accustomed to change, one would think that the change from war to peace would be welcome and simple. Peace, however, requires that we change hate to tolerance and treat each other with humanity. This requires far more effort than is commonly imagined.

The assassin looked to the laws of religion and history to find justification for his act. He claimed that he was acting on the word of God when in fact, he was acting on his interpretation of the words of God, which is in effect, the same as acting on his own. The attraction to religious laws is in the comfort that they provide. But these laws are susceptible to interpretation and perversion, in the absence of caring and humanity, and therein lies the danger. The assassin, through a lack of caring and humanity, interpreted the laws in such a way as to circumvent one of our first laws: "Thou shalt not murder."

This Week in Canadian Jewish History

November 15, 1977 The North American Jewish Students Network-Canada, an affiliate of the World Union of Jewish Students, was founded. Network promotes education and activism for university students and young adults. (Canadian Jewish Agenda, C.J.C. 1995)

Two weeks later

It is now almost two weeks since Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin was killed. His family and his people have emerged from the week of mourning. But mourning remains.

Unlike the torn garment, mourning's outward mark, the heart that was rent cannot be cast aside or stored away as a reminder to be retrieved on occasions of private melancholy. The heart, though broken, is still life's sustaining force, driving us forward inexorably to the next day. But what the "next day" now holds for the Jewish people, in Israel and in the Diaspora, is the daunting task of attempting to restore to whole, a community that is divided, shaken and full of self-doubt.

On the Monday following the murder, Rav Yehuda Amital, the rosh yeshivah of Yeshivat Har Etzion, long a force for tolerance and moderation within the religious community in Israel, spoke out forcefully in the beit midrash against the man and the ideology that drove him to kill. Rav Amital was outraged and terribly saddened by the assassination. We excerpt parts of the shiur to his pupils. His words comprise a good beginning point for the work that lies ahead for us all.

"There is a double chillul HaShem, desecration of God's name, when one who claims to be a ben Torah, who sees himself as serving God, is capable of this deed. This is Torah? This is Torah education? What a terrible chillul HaShem! Anyone who is not shocked lacks even an iota of yirat shamayim, fear of God. He has no idea of what is honor of God."

Rav Amital indignantly condemned any loyalty to what he called the ideology of force, the attitude of supreme self-righteousness, which disregards the rules of democratic government and which was used to justify the murder. "This horrible act, directed against the kingdom of Israel, is also an assault on the kingdom of God. It is an assault on the entire people of Israel, not only because of the act itself, but because one man cannot say: 'I will decide for everyone. I have the right to assault the [man] chosen by the people, a man who dedicated his life to the Jewish people.'

"I am gravely worried by this entire ideology of force ... We are not inoculated against this danger, which lurks especially in the ideology of force and is doubly dangerous when people begin to speak in the name of God." Later in the week, at a gathering of religious and settler leaders, Rav Amital further developed this theme: "We have to stop using Jewish law in political matters; we have to stop delegitimizing the democratically elected government and demonizing it as treasonous."

But knowing how contagious pessimism can be, Rav Amital was determined to leave his students with a positive message. "I have a feeling," he continued, "that extremism on both sides will lessen. We can continue, even while disagreeing, to find the will and the strength to build the State of Israel ... Despite our differences of opinion we still have much to unite us ... We must fight against hatred."

Rav Amital's courage and determination must be emulated. His message – to fight against hatred – is one which has often appeared on these pages. It cannot be overstated or overemphasized.

Last Sunday, eight days after the assassination, some 200,000 Israelis came together in the square in Tel Aviv, since renamed Rabin Square, where many had gathered one week earlier and where the prime minister fell. They met to say one final farewell and to rededicate themselves publicly to the cause which took the prime minister's life. As it had one week earlier, the Song of Peace became their rallying cry and the evening's hymnal. In freely translated form, we reproduce last two stanzas.

> "Don't simply say peace may come one day.
> But help it to arrive.
> For peace is not just a far off dream
> It's the hope we keep alive.
> Thus, sing out loud the song of peace.
> Whisper not a plea.
> Far better, sing out loud the song of peace
> Let your voice cry out proudly."

Surreal and so sad

As I write this, almost four days have passed since the numbing assassination of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin. There is one word that constantly returns to me in my attempt to digest what has happened: surreal. How else can I describe standing among hundreds of thousands of mourners as the draped coffin of the leader of our country slowly drove by? How else can I describe standing among tens of thousands of mourners, some singing, some holding candles, some staring blankly ahead, in front of the Prime Minister's Residence the night after the murder? How else can I describe the scene of kaffiyeh-clad King Hussein followed by Hosni Mubarak and the Torah-teaching Bill Clinton eulogizing our tiny nation's leader to the entire world from Mount Herzl?

Did this really happen?

Four days later, and it's still surreal. I try to understand what happened and I can't. I try to understand how a Jew could coldly walk up to the prime minister of Israel and kill him with two tiny bullets, but I can't. I don't think I ever will completely comprehend that this really occurred. A Jew killed the leader of the State of Israel. Read that a few times. Do you understand that? Did this really happen?

It is difficult for Jews in the Diaspora to understand the ever widening gap that has emerged in this country since the Oslo accord was signed some two years ago. On an almost daily basis, Likud attacked Labor and Labor assailed Likud; journalists slandered settlers and settlers denounced journalists; non-observant defamed observant and observant maligned non-observant; government ministers vilified Oslo opponents and Oslo opponents denigrated government members. With this divisive acrimony, our dream of national unity fractured into terrifying nightmares.

And now the whole world knows. Any thoughts of trying to wash our dirty laundry in private have been destroyed by the ubiquitous CNN and the other world media closely examining our destructive divisions. This, too, is somewhat surreal. I sit in my living room watching Gerold Kessel and Walter Rogers interviewing acquaintances and teachers of mine about religious Judaism. Overnight, issues that remained confined to certain segments of Israeli society burst forth for the world to see: Is there something wrong with the religious educational system? Do rabbis have too much authority? Can observant and non-observant Jews live together?

People are thinking now. A lot. I am thinking now. A lot. I am thinking of how a Torah observant Jew could take a gun in his hand, walk up to the leader of our first independent country in 2,000 years and kill him. A fellow Jew, who devoted his entire life to the country. I think of Lee Harvey Oswald, a somewhat mythical figure totally removed from my existence. And then I think of the murderer, a young man who went through a similar educational system to the one I and most of my friends attended. We are basically in the same circle of society in Israel — we studied in similar yeshivot, discussed the same issues of religious Zionism, volunteered for the same causes and probably have somewhat comparable aspirations for the future of the country.

And yet, he took a gun and killed the prime minister of Israel. I could easily pass this off and say, as many have, that he is not part of us, that he is michutz la'machaneh — outside the camp. Perhaps, but the fact is, that we study the same Torah, the Torah that defines our lives. This is not some distant, marginal assassin. If I had known him, we probably would have been friendly. Perhaps we would have led programs for new olim together, something both of us have done in the past. And yet, he took a gun and killed the prime minister of Israel. He and others of his ilk have trampled on one of the most basic and crucial teachings of Judaism, Dracheha darchei noam v'chol netivoteha shalom — Her ways are ways of pleasures and all her paths are paths of peace.

So I am thinking now. A lot. I am thinking about the future of this country. I am thinking about the future of the Jewish people. I am thinking that perhaps this is an opportunity to bring ourselves together, to finally recognize that we can accomplish so much more if we unite.

Observant Jews, in all shapes and sizes, must reach out with respect to non-observant Jews. Perhaps, instead of the next demonstration against this or against that, we will demonstrate for something. For love. For tolerance. For understanding. I dream of seeing Jews inviting different Jews to their homes to experience the serenity of a traditional Shabbat. I dream of Jews asking other Jews to peacefully explain why they feel so connected to the land. I dream of Jews joining all types of other Jews at festivities celebrating Judaism. I dream of Jews studying with Jews the great accomplishments of Herzl, Bialik and the other builders of this country. I dream of Jews all around the world casting aside their petty arguments and concentrating on engendering peace and honor amongst one another.

We'll need new dreamers

Naive? Perhaps. But I think it's time for a little naivete here. The realization of the dreams of a few idealists created this country. In order to perpetuate and strengthen it, we'll need new dreamers who can rouse the Jewish people out of this nightmare to a vision of light and hope. Dreamers like Jacob, with their feet planted firmly in the earth, but their aspirations carried by angels to the glorious heavens. Dreamers like Joseph, who can forgive past wrongdoing in their selfless desire to synthesize the dissonant voices into a mellifluous harmony.

To paraphrase Rabin at the White House on Sept. 13, 1995: Enough rhetoric! No more hate! No more violence, verbal or physical. Let us respect one another and cast aside blame for past sins. Let all Jews, in both Israel and the Diaspora, stress what binds us together. Through deep reflection, we have an opportunity to unite as a people. Let us begin now.

Remembering Shlomo

(Rabbi Shlomo Carlebach died last year on on the 11th of November, the 16th day of Heshvan. In his memory and in his honor, we are featuring an essay in two parts by Neila Carlebach about him and his legacy. This is the second part of the essay which began in The CJN last week.)

By NEILA CARLEBACH

Shlomo was offered a position as a rabbi and he had to complete his studies. He approached Rav Isaac Hutner, the rosh yeshivah of Chaim Berlin, to give him the oral exam necessary for smichah. Two months and two weeks later, he was awarded yoreh, yoreh, yadin, yadim, the highest level of rabbinic ordination.

At this time, a former Chaim Berlin student recalls, "One day there was a sign on the bulletin board with the large letters 'TASTGIG.' Below, it said 'Taste and See that G-d is Good. Join Shlomo Carlebach for a Kumsitz,' and it gave an address. We heard that Shloime was taking boys and girls, some from public schools, and they were sitting on the floor with candles lit and singing together. That's how he tried to mikarev them, bring them closer to Judaism."

That kind of evening became Shlomo's hallmark. While singing into the early morning hours, Shlomo awakened thousands of Jewish souls and rekindled the faith and fervor of countless religious Jews.

I attended hundreds such evenings and never ceased being moved as I watched the dawning of a soul-connection to a thought or a lilting melody. Every city in the world we visited boasted of a Shlomo group that waited eagerly for his arrival. His visits were described as spiritual injections, soul-care packages.

Everyone knew the songs, and all were led into his way of learning Chassidut. And most importantly, everyone spoke Shlomo's language: "Hey brother, peace ... what's happenin ... mamash ... you look sharp like a dog ... gevalt, is this deep ... so open your hearts ... give me your sweetest, cutest attention." We all knew the lingo, how to roll our eyes towards heaven and raise our hands in resignation to the Almighty, and how to freely hug each other in a fraternal pact of soul-friendship.

We were "Shlomo chevra," connected to the "highest of the high" and the "holiest of the holy." From wealthy homes in Mexico, Caracas, Toronto and Fifth Avenue penthouses in New York, to rabbi's homes in Johannesburg, Miami and London, to banquet halls all over the world, to parlors in Leningrad, Bombay, Sydney and Bucharest, to Shlomo's House of Love and Prayer, 79th Street Synagogue in New York and the moshav in Israel, people of all ages and in all walks of life rejoiced in their heritage, with Shlomo guiding them to the home of their souls — with kindness and patience. Shlomo was so accessible, so loving, he became everyone's best friend.

In New Jersey where he had his first pulpit, Shlomo would sit at the piano and write and sing songs. He eventually accumulated an eager audience. For teaching his Sunday school classes the aleph bet with his guitar, for telling parents not to yell at the kids so much, and for letting his cheder students deliver the droshas on Shavuot to combat the talking, Shlomo got fired. He took solace in the fact that the Baal Shem Tov was also fired from his job as a teacher for playing with the children after school, and that maybe G-d wanted him to sing rather than to teach.

With enough songs composed to cut a record, Shlomo launched his singing career and was an immediate success.

He was an original and he single-handedly changed the face of Jewish music. For years he played only for religious people, but he realized that he could make a difference in the lives of the non-religious as well. The Berkeley folk festival might open this door for him, he believed, if he could get there.

Shortly thereafter, he gave a concert in Miami Beach. A couple approached him with the Jewish parent's most famous line, "Do I have a daughter for you!" Without thinking, Shlomo autographed a record with his best wishes to their daughter, who coincidentally and unbeknownst to Shlomo, was a professor of sociology at Berkeley. She loved the record and played it constantly.

As fate would have it, Shlomo's niggunim wafting through the June air at Berkeley attracted a neighbor who was none other than the organizer of the Berkeley festival. Shlomo was just the "ethnic" he wanted.

On the bill with acts like the Grateful Dead, Jefferson Airplane and Joan Baez, Shlomo admitted to being nervous at first, but "then I mamash saw thousands, thousands of kids, who were waiting for the highest. And I had a little bit of nosay chen, I found favor in their eyes; they liked me. Only Pete Seeger and humble me had a standing ovation. It was a gevalt."

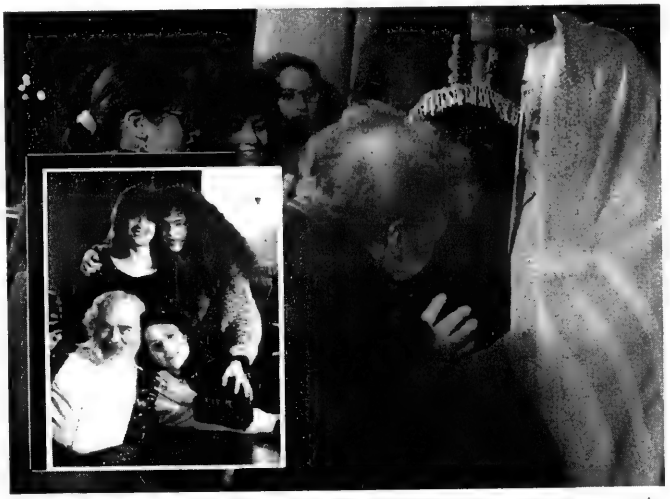
Never one to let an opportunity pass, he announced that he would be going to shul at 7:30 the next morning and invited anyone who wanted to join him to meet at his hotel. "I was expecting maybe 10, 20 kids. I don't know how many there were. Anywhere between 1,000 and 2,000 kids were waiting for me. It was unbelievable."

In 1966, the House of Love and Prayer was born, the first centre for baalei tshuvah. Literally thousands of people poured through the doors for Shabbat and when the doors were jammed with the crowds, they entered through the windows. Shabbat would end in the wee small hours. Shlomo opened the world of Yiddishkeit to Jewish kids who had not only given up on being Jewish but also on being part of society. It was because Shlomo believed that every person was special and that every soul was worth crying with, that so many people trusted him enough to connect to their Jewish roots.

In 1970, Shlomo had the opportunity to travel to Russia. From recent immigrants, he had heard that his music was circulating in places as far as Siberia. He went to add strength and give more hope to the Jews behind the Iron Curtain. Word spread that Shlomo would be davening in the shul in Moscow on Simchat Torah. In spite of the spies and the informers, Shlomo circulated among the crowd hugging and greeting people and quietly inviting them to his hotel. With the KGB following him, his hotel room bugged for sound and restrictions against Russians entering hotels, Shlomo managed to sing for hours to over 100 people who somehow snuck into his room. With nothing more than the sound of his voice singing and talking, he uplifted the hearts of those who were fortunate enough to be there, as well as all those who subsequently got even a 10th generation copy of the few tapes that were made.

I was privileged to return to the Soviet Union with him in 1989. The experience was totally transforming for me, for the friends who travelled with us and for the 52,000 with whom he sang and danced, whom he taught and kissed. He said that the Russian Jews were being persecuted for connecting to Israel. Therefore, it was so important to Shlomo that their vision of Israel be holy. He also wanted to have the privilege of telling the Russians how special they themselves were.

Shlomo heard their stories and songs, gave them Hebrew names, bat and bar mitzvahed multitudes and hugged every man, woman and child, Jew and non-Jew within his reach.



TORAH AND SONG

Rabbi Shlomo Carlebach typically holding forth the Torah for others to embrace. Inset: The author, Neila Carlebach, is seen with her family. Dari is standing beside her. Neshama is seated beside Shlomo.

I cried when every person suddenly lit a candle and the opera hall was alight with thousands of little candles waving in a totally silent tribute. I saw the tears rolling down Shlomo's cheeks as he shouted, "Yidden, never give up, never give up." Miraculously, glasnost, perestroika and the dissolution of Communism followed.

Shlomo also reached out to the non-Jewish world. In the late '60s he gave his card and offered friendship to the Arabs in Israel. He sat on ecumenical panels with gurus, swamis and priests. He was invited to an audience with Pope John XXIII; unfortunately the Pope died before they could meet. To one swami who asked Shlomo after an incredible concert whether he was trying to steal his followers, Shlomo replied, "God forbid, brother, I was just borrowing some of mine back." Shlomo was a guest of the Catholic Church both in Belgium, where he taught Tehillim, Psalms, to monks and nuns, and in Austria, where he travelled to small towns to play for villagers who had never met a Jew. He said that it wasn't enough for him to makarev Yidden anymore. He wanted to bring peace to the world. He said that if world leaders would sing and dance with each other instead of just talking, peace would come faster.

When the Pope visited New York last month, at one of his open air meetings attended by hundreds of thousands of people, the Pope swayed and clapped to a niggun Shlomo had written, L'man achai v'reyai, set to English words, the same niggun the chazzan at Shaarei Shomayim in Toronto sang during Musaf before Yom Kippur last month. Mashiach must be on the way.

I remember Shlomo in so many places and in such extraordinary circumstances. He was always gentle and alive. His eyes and smile had a life of their own; they made miracles happen. I remember Sukkot in the House of Love and Prayer, where we prayed until well after midnight with a longing that changed my life, and where around 350 people slept in the sukkah every night. I remember Shlomo holding our babies and kissing them continuously saying, "Babela, are you the sweetest in the world?" I remember being Shlomo's mezuzah; he never passed me without kissing me. I remember our walking in the moshav in Israel late at night. He would always stop to breathe deeply and tell me how good the air was in Eretz Yisrael.

I remember his Shabbat; the L'cha Dodi would last an hour as we truly welcomed the Shabbat bride, every week. I remember Kiddush levana, blessing the new moon in Jerusalem till 3 a.m. and how the police, who were called to remove us from the road, stayed with us and sang until 5.

I remember Shlomo's passionate outcry when he saw a religious Jew hitting his child. He told him to take off his yarmulke and tzitzit, that God didn't need his kind of Yiddishkeit. I remember Shlomo hurting inside and being angry when people stole his music or lied, saying he had given them the rights to his music, or didn't pay him royalties or for concerts.

I remember Shlomo running back to the shul to get food and a jacket for a homeless man on yom tov and chasing a street person on Monday with the money he promised to give him when he was asked on Shabbat.

I remember Arabs, Jews and guards dancing and crying together in jail in Israel after an hour with Shlomo. My only surprise was that Mashiach didn't come that minute.

I remember the concerts in Soweto, South Africa, where black people danced to songs like Am Yisroel Chai and David Melech.

I remember Shlomo talking quietly with our daughters, all the time holding their hands and kissing them, or learning Talmud with Dari, or singing with Neshama on stages all over the world. I remember our quiet evenings when we sat around like ordinary people. I remember the bad jokes he told that were so funny because he laughed all through the telling.

I know that God gave this generation a gift; I know that I love more people than I imagined I could ever know; I know that I have to learn a little Torah every day. I know I can still hardly bear the thought that Shlomo, the sweet singer of Israel, is no longer here. But I do feel him hovering between worlds; I know he is still working his magic. I know that he is sitting at G-d's right hand bargaining with him to do more for his Yidden.

G-d bless you Shlomo. Bless us to know how to love all our brothers and sisters.

Mamash, thank you for everything ... Till we meet again.

Neila Carlebach married Rabbi Shlomo in 1972. She is collecting, compiling and archiving Shlomo's music and teachings for publication.

Opinions

Legacies of the Old Jewish World

In my last column, I spoke about the book Daughters of the Shtetl, which triggered in me a response based on the experiences of my own family members, and on the need to counter the lingering mythology that the shtetl was a place where all was largely sweetness, observance and light (albeit interspersed with pogroms). A far cry from reality, as we have long known, and as the book, subtitled Life and Labor in the Immigrant Generation, illustrates.

By Jean M. Gerber

This book, and other research, have amply proven that in fact, life in the shtetl, indeed all of late 19th century Jewish life, was a time of upheaval in terms of economics, gender roles, political movements and attitudes towards Jewish religious traditions. This upheaval was both a cause and an effect of the massive Jewish emigration that began slowly early in the 19th century, built during the middle decades and became a flood between 1880 and World War I. Often the family would send an eldest daughter or son, or someone else, together with a father, to labor in the immigrant-based garment and related trades, saving money to bring the rest across.

A major part of that upheaval was the shift in roles for wives, daughters and consequently, husbands and fathers. In Europe, shtetl wives worked — they had no choice. In the New World, daughters worked — they also had no choice — and mothers, by and large, stayed home or worked with their husbands in the small shops and businesses of urban North America.

Those daughters encountered conditions most unsanitary, with ample opportunity for sexual harassment, poor wages and exploitation at all levels. What they became a part of was the movement to protect workers through the formation of garment-workers' unions.

Daughters chronicles the conditions that led to massive involvement of Jewish women with the labor movement. The idea of workers' rights was not news to many immigrants; one of the factors in the changes in 19th century Jewish life was the growth of many varieties of socialism among Jewish youth. The abandonment of Jewish law, already rife among certain segments of European Jewry, by no means meant abandoning the call for social justice upon which Judaism rested. In the New World, under conditions that, unfortunately, have reappeared in the Third World countries that supply our clothing, Jewish women and men were at the forefront of labor organization.

Now, what about today?

The effects of these changes in Jewish life are still felt. Even though Jewish immigrant women would by and large withdraw from active labor participation after marriage, they had acquired the skills and power that go with taking control of ones' own economic situation. They also realized that, however imperfect the gender balance remained between men and women in terms of power in the unions, they had been a significant and valued part of a social movement for the betterment of the group, as opposed to the individual.

Today both networks of social justice and equality are under attack. The United States has made this battle overt — withdrawal of funds for social support networks to the poor and the elderly are taken for granted. As usual, the Canadian community is less obvious, but many Jews both in the United States and in Canada now vote for parties whose overt mission is to lower taxes for the middle class and withdraw even the most basic support from poor families in a reversion to the Victorian notion that the poor are by definition undeserving.

Astonishingly, the agenda of those who would punish the poor for the benefit of the wealthier is often coupled with an attack on immigrants, also seen as draining our native economy, and women who dare to aspire to reach the same top echelons of business, industry and the professions as men.

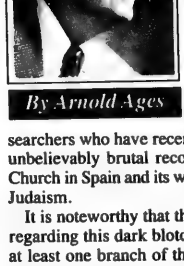
Unless you are an aboriginal Jew, you are descended from immigrants. Unless those immigrants were very fortunate, they came here with $12.50 or less in their pockets. Secular or frum, they arrived with a sense of responsibility that went beyond them to the community at large, whether that community was one of landsmen or laborers. If today there are vocal Jewish women attacking barriers to women's equality, it is because they learned from their grandmothers (figuratively at least) that women's work was valuable and should be valued on a par with men's.

Tevye's family in Sholem Aleichem's stories was true in one respect: His daughters' lives were a microcosm of the changes taking place in Jewish life. One became a revolutionary, one a tailor's wife (and, perhaps, victim of Hitler). One married a Christian and was lost completely to her parents.

It is not true that we have no roots, except sentimental ones, in their world. The changes viewed with alarm by many — the continued insistence of women on equality and the need for a just society — are the legacies of Old World Jewish experience, not something dreamed up by Jews living in the late 20th century New World.

'Dark blotch on a canvass'

Moshe Lazar, the eminent scholar of Romance languages and literatures, made the comment a couple of years ago in Toronto, that while the Nazis wreaked havoc on the Jewish people for 12 long and horrible years, the Spanish Inquisition took a leisurely 400 years to do the same thing.



By Arnold Ages

Lazar's striking thesis has received powerful confirmation in the writings of three researchers who have recently delved into the unbelievably brutal record of the Catholic Church in Spain and its war against Jews and Judaism.

It is noteworthy that the new excavations regarding this dark blotch on the canvas of at least one branch of the Catholic Church should appear at a time when Catholic-Jewish relations have been perhaps the most cordial in history.

The current interlude of rapproachement cannot, however, obscure the tragic experience of the Jews of Spain. In Benzion Netanyahu's The Inquisition (Random House), Norman Roth's Conversos, Inquisition and the Expulsion (Wisconsin) and Erna Paris' The End of Days (Lester), the contours of that horrific event known as the Inquisition are fleshed out in graphic prose.

The details, as these authors show, are lengthy and complex, but the basic facts are as follows. The experience of Jews under Christian Visigothic rule in the premedieval period was negative. Under Muslim rule Jews enjoyed a "golden age" of religious, economic and literary creativity. During and after the Christian reconquest, the situation of Jews had its ups and downs but deteriorated by 1492 when the expulsion occurred.

What happened in the century preceding the expulsion is an instructive lesson in the perils of religious fanaticism and intolerance. Spain under Catholic Christianity could not tolerate Judaism as a competing faith, even though the tiny Jewish population constituted no competition in the first place. In the 14th and 15th centuries, powerful missionary voices such as that of Vincent Ferrer achieved thousands of converts from Judaism to Christianity.

By the end of the 15th century, there were so many Jews who had converted to Christianity that they were considered by certain zealous ecclesiastical authorities to constitute a dangerous fifth column. In order to ferret out this perceived menace to the purity of Christian blood, representatives of the church sought and received permission in 1480 to set up Inquisitional courts to try suspected Jewish-Christians.

For four centuries, these courts in Spain, Portugal and the Spanish dominations in North, Central and South America unleashed terroristic tribunals against crypto-Jews, heretics and Jews. Death by burning at the stake was the preferred form of execution for the countless thousands that were found guilty of "Judaizing."

Netanyahu and Roth feel that the first victims, the Marranos, were especially tragic figures, because by and large they were sincere Christians caught in a web of religious identification bequeathed to them by Jewish ancestors who heeded the call to conversion through conviction or expediency. In fact, Roth suggests that the most ferocious polemics against Judaism came from Jewish converts to Christianity. Whatever the source of their ancestors' motives, the conversos — the converted Jews — were Jewish only by ethnic accident.

Paris, in her essay, is somewhat more flexible in her description of the conversos and shows that despite their outward profession of the Christian faith, many remained close to Jewish friends, family, geography and gastronomic preferences. In the end, both the crypto-Jews and the Jewish-Christians came under the scrutiny of the Inquisition — with catastrophic results.

While there is some difference of opinion on the Jewish quotient of the converted Jews, the three authors are in agreement about the disastrous four centuries of persecution of Jews. The organized theft of Jewish assets, the expulsion, the harassment and ecclesiastical murder of Jews during that period are not something of which the Catholic Church can be proud.

It's time for the Jewish people en masse, through a class action suit or through the agency of the State of Israel, the only palpable expression of the Jewish nation today, to demand compensation — $10 billion would be a starting point — today for the four centuries of institutional cruelty which the Spanish Church and crown foisted upon its Jewish community during those dark centuries and days when the cross virtually blotted out the sun for the sons of Jacob.

My brother Yitzhak

There, on television, lay the man who made war that Israel might live, and who lived that war might be abolished. I wept like David when he heard of the deaths of Saul and Jonathan, and in the language of David, I say: tzar li aleicha, achi yitzhak, I grieve for you, my brother Yitzhak.

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut

His death coincided with the weekly Torah reading of the Akedah, the binding of Isaac. Abraham was ready to kill his son, but God prevented it. The assassin, too, on motza'ei Shabbat, thought he had heard the word of God, but in his blindness he did not see the ram in the bushes nor did he sense that he had not heard the words of Hakadosh baruch Hu, and had taken the voice of hate to be the voice of God.

How could he come to his dreadful conclusion, and even now assert that he is glad to have done what he did and only regrets that he failed to kill Shimon Peres as well? Because he belongs to those who don't believe in argument or democratic give-and-take. He was one of the many people around the world who do not want to listen to what others have to say, and who are prepared to settle the argument with violence. First they abandon reasoned speech and shout, then they shoot. The murderer was one of them; he believed in bullets, not ballots.

More than that: The gunman does not understand what Judaism is all about. For in addition to Torah and the rest of Tanach, what is the great document by which our people have lived? It is the Talmud, and that huge compendium is essentially a record of argument and counter-argument, of weighing one idea against another. Our sages insisted on reminding us that in the service of God and Israel elu va'elu divrei Elokim chayim, both sides of the issue are words of the Living God. Words, not violence.

But words too can breed violence. When you call the prime minister of Israel "traitor" and "murderer," when at a public meeting you show him as a Nazi in uniform, sooner or later someone will come and take the defamation to heart. In consequence, the prime minister is dead. There is now double reason to remember the warning of our sages: chachamim, hiz'haru bedivreichem, you who guide the people, watch your words!

Israelis have learned to guard against external enemies, not against one of their own. Now they are like other nations in this way too — chaval.

We love Israel, and we know that all of its people want peace. They disagree vigorously on how it is best achieved, but the goal is still the same. We too, here in the Diaspora, disagree on the best way, and the discussion has not always been civil. In consequence, we have grown farther apart from each other.

In memory of Yitzhak Rabin let us recover that special quality which we once had: to be a united community, in which love for our people is greater than our political and even theological differences. We haven't met like this for a long time — it took murder most foul to bring us together. Let us not wait for the next tragedy; rather, may we assemble the next time out of our of mutual love and common hope.

Just remember this: Whether we as a people shall live, is up to God; but whether we shall live as one people or divided against each other, is up to us ...

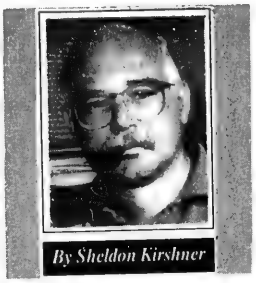
The Kirshner File

Reflections on the referendum in Quebec

On Oct. 30, when the results of the Quebec referendum were in, I went to bed with decidely mixed feelings.



By Sheldon Kirshner

I was relieved that the No side had won and that Canada was whole.

I was enormously bothered by Jacques Parizeau's inflammatory remark blaming "money and the ethnic vote" for the separatists' razor-thin loss. Was this, as the Globe and Mail pointedly asked, "a chilling glimpse of the dark, ethnocentric side of Quebec nationalism?"

No and yes.

The media in Quebec, I was gratified to read, savaged Parizeau, while Lucien Bouchard — the white knight of the sovereigntists and Parizeau's putative successor — distanced himself from his racist-tinged comments.

Furthermore, French Canadians who disagreed with Parizeau's instant analysis made it abundantly clear that their vision of sovereignty was pluralistic and territorial.

As a former Montrealer who has followed the sovereignty debate since the 1960s, I have no doubt that the separatist movement harbors open-minded liberals who reject atavistic, tribal nationalism usually associated with the past.

Nevertheless, I can't ignore the gnawing feeling that Parizeau — a dyed-in-the-wool separatist — had the implicit support of a formidable constituency in the vast majority of ridings which cast their lot for the Yes campaign. Presumably, they are bitter that they were robbed of victory by Anglophones and Allophones.

I am also troubled by French Canadians who, overtly or not, distinguish between Anglophone and pur laine Quebecers; by separatist politicians, like Philippe Pare, who urged ethnic minorities to step aside so that "old-stock Quebecers" could decide Quebec's fate; and, of course, by Bouchard's subliminal gaffe, in which he characterized French Canadians as members of the "white race."

Parizeau's remarks following No vote trouble minorities

These parochial views harken back to a time, before World War II, when French Canadian nationalism appeared to be in thrall to bigoted extremists, a period of Quebec's history described by Esther Delisle in a revealing book (The Traitor and the Jew) and subsequently amplified by novelist Mordecai Richler in a magazine essay.

Let's not forget that the Montreal daily, Le Devoir, which backed the separatist option, once wrote: "The Israelites aspire — as everyone knows — to the happy day when their race will dominate the world ..."

Let's not forget that Andre Laurendeau, an icon in French Quebec, once said of the Jews: "You insinuate yourselves among us ... If you could only feel the exasperation your presence everywhere provokes ..."

Let's not forget that Abbe Lionel Groulx, a hero among French Canadians, once denounced "Jewish internationalism as one of the most dangerous forces of moral and social decay on the planet."

By referring to these alarming statements, I am not suggesting that separatists are innately anti-Semitic. What I am saying is that their movement contains no shortage of narrow and vindictive voices, of which Parizeau's is probably one.

No wonder minorities in Quebec feel vulnerable, if not threatened.

Montrealer recalls reporting career

When I lived in Montreal, I read the Montreal Star religiously. It was a good newspaper, and one of its finest reporters — and last editor — was Gerald Clark.

These memories bubbled to the surface as I perused Clark's memoirs, No Mud On The Back Seat (Robert Davies Publishing, $19.99), a workmanlike account of a fulfilled life and career.

The son of a Galician Jewish garment worker who immigrated to Canada in 1903, Clark and his three siblings were raised in the area of The Main, the border between English and French Montreal.

Clark, whose original surname was Klughaupt, studied at McGill University, where a rigid quota system ensured that only a certain percentage of Jews was admitted. On his first day of classes in 1935, a friend introduced him to the McGill Daily, the student newspaper, and Clark never looked back. In his final year, he was appointed editor-in-chief, the first Jew to hold this position. But Clark is under no illusions. He doubts whether he would have been "acceptable" had he not anglicized his name.

Clark's first reporting job was with the Canadian Press at $15 a week. Lasting there only a month, he moved to the Standard, a weekly, which hired him on a "space" basis. In 1942, he became the Standard's Ottawa reporter, and in 1943, its war correspondent in Europe. As he left Central Station in Montreal, his father said, "You will meet many strange women. Be careful."

Clark, presumably, may have been too busy for such amorous flings. He covered the Allied invasion of Normandy, the liberation of Paris, Brussels and the Buchenwald concentration camp, and the surrender of German forces in Reims. In addition, he was given a personally escorted tour of Hitler's former apartment and offices in Berlin by a Red Army soldier. Clark describes these events with panache.

Back in Montreal, in 1946, Clark was appointed editor of the Standard. But reporting was in his blood and in 1953, he wrote a series on the Soviet Union for which he won a national newspaper award.

Seeking new challenges, Clark joined the Montreal Star, initially as a New York-based columnist and then, in 1955, as chief European correspondent. Among the countries he visited was China. Out of this assignment emerged a critically-acclaimed book and an award-winning documentary film.

Returning to Montreal, largely because his wife had contracted cancer, Clark was named associate editor. But a sedentary existence was not for him. Soon afterward, he was off to Israel to cover the trial of war criminal Adolf Eichmann. It was the first of 40 trips he would make to Israel, which he portrays as "a troubled and fascinating land."

Clark was elevated to editor in 1968, with responsiblity for the editorial and opposite editorial pages. Curiously, he has little to say about this period. The three chapters that follow, dealing with Israel, South Africa, hotels he has stayed in, South America and Moscow, are the book's weakest and least interesting.

The pace picks up in the final chapter, when Clark recounts three attempts to recruit him as a spy, ruminates about anti-Semitism (he never felt held back as a Jew) and briefly recollects his stint as an extra in a Hollywood movie.

Not surprisingly, his saddest day in journalism occurred when the Montreal Star folded, a tragedy he ascribes to management's mishandling of a strike. Clark wept on the day it put out its last edition, but he did not wallow in his tears. Rebounding, he wrote a book and then began to freelance for the Reader's Digest, an association that continues.

In closing, Clark writes that he considers himself blessed to have been a journalist. "I am one of the fortunate ones, to hit not only on a profession I loved from the start, but to be able to carry it on to the end."

Lucky man.

Communal discourse

By RABBI MARK DRATCH

The 5756 volume of the JNF's annual collection of essays in Jewish thought and law, Shanah beShanah, includes a discussion by Rabbi Shlomo Aviner, head of Yeshivat Ateret Kohanim, of the halachic rules of communal discourse. He bases most of his comments on articles by the late and revered Rabbi Tzvi Yehudah Kook. Both are closely identified with the "settlement movement." The following is an abstract of his arguments.

Many of us understand and accept the severity of speaking lashon hora, gossip and slander, when it relates to other individuals. We know that the restrictions apply not only when we falsely malign another, but even when what we say is true. Actually, lashon hora must be true; it is motzi shem ra that is made up of lies! Nevertheless, we too often permit ourselves to speak ill of entire groups and communities. However, the prohibition of the latter is even more severe than the former (Chafetz Chayyim, Hilchot Lashon Hora 10:12).

Some allow themselves to deride others because of their "heretical" beliefs and ground themselves in the Chafetz Chayyim's statement that it is permitted to speak lashon hora about an apikorus (heretic) (ibid, 8:5). Rav Kook regretted the fact that the Chafetz Chayyim recorded this opinion, maintaining that while it is the halachically correct position, others will misuse and abuse his statement for their own purposes. Indeed, Rabbi Naftali Tzvi Yehudah Berlin pointed out that at the end of the Second Temple period, many considered those who did not share their opinions and religious convictions, despite their observance of mitzvot, to be heretics (Introduction to Ha'amek Davar, Bereishit). This, he maintained, was the wanton hatred that brought about the destruction of the Temple.

Rav Kook explained that improper stereotyping of groups and their members' generalization is the product of the belief that the truth lies only in oneself and with one's own position, and that others are evil and wrong. This is improper, he writes, because "there is no righteous person on earth who doeth good and sinneth not" (Ecclesiates 7:20), and there is no party or group that has the monopoly on truth and righteousness. His father, Rav Abraham Isaac Kook, wrote, "It is a bad sign for any party that believes that it alone possesses the source of all wisdom and all justice, and that with everyone else is merely futility and folly" (Letters 1:17).

We must never forego debate; each person must articulate and passionately voice his position. Rabbi Abraham Isaac Kook encouraged dialogue, maintaining that disagreement does not destroy peace. At a time of great tension between the Revisionists and their opponents, he pleaded with them not to cause a chillul HaShem, a desecration of God's Name, through an uncivilized and disrespectful battle. "And now, House of Israel, 'do not any more desecrate My Holy Name,' avoid it. Learn to look, each one to the other, each party to the other party, with the eyes of compassionate brothers who are together in great distress, and who are willing to join for the sake of one holy purpose: the benefit of the whole, its honor and its protection" (Leshever Bat Ami, Maamarei HaRa'ayah, p. 365).

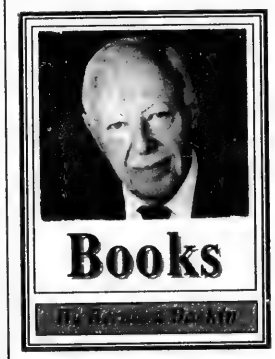
Rabbi Aviner concludes that in our public debate we should acknowledge that which is good in those with whom we disagree. And we should use good sense, discretion and judgment in trying to persuade others, and not in denigrating them. And if we are unable to engage in this public discussion properly, then we may not engage in it at all.

Rabbi Aviner compares this situation to that of a person who does not have the medical expertise to operate on another; he is prohibited from operating even if that person's life is in danger.

The Vilna said, "In giving rebuke, one may not speak harshly, for harsh words are not needed, but one should speak delicately. And if it is impossible for a person to speak softly, he is exempt from the obligation of rebuke altogether" (Orchot Chayyim, Keter Rosh, 143).

Through the proper exchange of ideas and perspectives, may we strengthen our own community and may we see peace and security for the people of Israel in the Land of Israel.

Rabbi Mark Dratch is the spiritual leader of Shaarei Shomayim Congregation in Toronto.



From a frightening past

The Haunted Land: Facing Europe's Ghosts After Communism by Tina Rosenberg (Random House, $35).

How honestly and effectively have the people and governments of Germany, Poland, the Czech Republic and Slovakia confronted their Communist pasts? The answers are convoluted and uncertain and constitute the burden of this book which opens a brilliant window onto a shadowy landscape.

Tina Rosenberg, an experienced investigative reporter, explores the motives and ideals of an entire post-war generation of leaders and followers — and their hopes and plans for a stable, democratic future.

Soon after the "Velvet Revolution," the Czechs enacted lustrace. This was the process which disgraced anyone who had collaborated with the spy apparatus of the former regime. The intent was honorable, but in practice crude, unfair and insensitive. Exemplary and courageous dissidents who had suffered under Communist control found themselves ostracized and pilloried. Somehow their names had been included in the undocumented files. The author focuses on the plight of a brave and long-suffering anti-Communist who, in this way, was driven from parliament and public life.

In neighboring Slovakia, lustrace was suspended when the country became independent and members of the elite regained power. The author reminds us that Slovakia thrived under communism and that the Slovaks had an unfortunate record of anti-Semitism even before the Nazis marched into the Czech lands. Slovaks assured Herman Goering that they would solve their Jewish problem. They became diligent Nazis, deporting 60,000 of their 90,000 Jews before Hitler even asked them to.

The book's section on Poland concentrates on General Wojciech Jaruzelski, a largely positive and empathic portrait of a complex personality. Did he act properly in declaring martial law in 1981, in order to stave off a Russian invasion? Or was it a shrewd manoeuvre to crush the powerful Solidarity Movement?

Once out of power, Jaruzelski underwent astonishing rehabilitation, even developing a friendship with Adam Michnik, a Jewish dissident whom he had once sent to jail for six years.

East Germany's attempt to deal with its Communist past, writes the author, "has been largely clumsy and ill-conceived, provoking resentment, anger and a sense of victimization."

In her closing chapter, the author worries that the Communist legacy has left citizens unaccustomed to searching for their own values and morals. "Such people can be easily persuaded to let demagogues do their thinking for them."

The opposite of communism is not anti-communism, asserts the author, which at times resembles it greatly. "The opposite is tolerance and the rule of law."

In this provocative and serious book, Rosenberg weaves together numerous and varied threads to present a picture of countries in transition. Their ability to move from a frightening past to a hopeful future may decide the destiny of Europe.

Need serious soul-searching

By HILLEL NEUER
Special to The CJN

As the shock slowly recedes, bitterness and confusion set in. So much is to be expected. But in the search for meaning — or worse, in pursuit of scoring political points — there is the unbecoming temptation to identify a convenient scapegoat.

GUEST VOICES

Fearing as much, Israel's leaders on the right were especially swift in denouncing Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's assassination as fundamentally contrary to the tenets of the Jewish faith. Likud chief Benjamin Netanyahu was unequivocal in his condemnation and, in statesman-like fashion, committed himself to refraining from placing any parliamentary obstacle to the forming of a new government by Shimon Peres.

Further harsh censure of the assassin's deed came from heads of religious and settlement groups, as well as from many of the men, women and children in their constituencies.

The point they all hoped to emphasize was that legitimate opposition to government policy is one thing, political violence quite another. As Netanyahu said, some actions are simply "beyond the pale."

Yet no amount of disclaimers and denunciations seems to suffice for those intent on pointing an accusing finger. Reports and comment in the world's electronic and print media have surrendered to stereotypes, so quick to impugn, implicity and explicitly, anyone in Israel who might be considered religious or right-wing.

For a typical example, consider a piece from Canadian TV correspondent Paul Workman which relied exclusively on Israeli experts holding particularly sharp left-wing views. For "balance," Workman found two nutty extremists to condone the assassination, this while the vast reasonable majority of settlers feel completely otherwise.

To be sure, one cannot dismiss outright those who allege a possible causal relationship between the opposition's hostile rhetoric against the Labor-Meretz coalition and the context which may have contributed to the assassination of Rabin. But does it follow that the Likud is guilty for the actions of a lone assassin acting "on orders from God?" Only the foolish or the politically vindictive would think so.

No segment ought to be immune now from the obligation to engage in some serious soul-searching and self-examination. Right-wing groups often went past the line with verbal assaults, or tolerated others doing so. Would a conscious effort on their part to maintain a more restrained atmosphere have kept events from reaching the brink?

Similar questions must be asked by elements in the leftist government and their supporters. Was it necessary to pursue peace by delegitimizing the settlers as the main "obstacles" to its realization? The left-wing establishment in the Israeli government and media cannot absolve itself from responsibility in the negligent aggravation of the religious right's sense of alienation. Many more prudent steps could have been taken on this side, too.

Now, some Israelis may find comfort and consolation in the national demonstration of unity which will likely accompany the mourning period. But it would be simplistic and naive to believe that any saving phoenix will arise from this fire, that the immense gaps separating the two sides will, somehow, suddenly be bridged. The dividing lines are neither accidental nor cosmetic; rather, the issues are substantive, the passions deeply ingrained. Powerful and competing interests are at stake, and this reality will soon become apparent once again.

And how could it be otherwise? Those of the ideological left devoutly believe that any rule over Palestinians turns their state into something they do not want it to be. Conversely, for the ideological right, to cut off parts of Eretz Yisrael is to cut the very life-giving roots of the Jewish state.

Among the pragmatic left, it is firmly believed that the full retention of the West Bank will preclude a resolution of the Middle East conflict and thus cause Israel more bloodshed, as well as political and economic isolation.

Yet to the right-wing pragmatist, the surrender of the strategic Judea and Samaria mountains to Arab control would not only impose immediate dangers for vulnerable settler communities, but would open key metropolitan areas to the threat of hostilities — in effect, an invitation for national suicide.

For Israelis who hold any version or combination of the above beliefs, given the dramatic personal and national consequences involved, they simply cannot remain dispassionate in the national debate. Thus the fissures in Israeli society are, sadly, here to stay, for at least the near future.

Does that mean, then, there is no hope, no way to mitigate the damage to the Jewish polity?

God forbid. What must follow over the next weeks and months — based on a sober recognition of the very real divisions — is a serious commitment to heal wounds, an attempt to understand the other's position and above all, the adoption of something more than a merely reactive approach toward the ominous threat posed by the dark, now-circling clouds of civil strife.

In real terms, one good first step toward rapprochement would be a genuine dedication by the leading political parties to abstain from exploiting political advantage from this tragic event. Netanyahu, as noted above, pledges as much. Equally, let's hope the temptation — provided by current popular feeling — to feel less constrained vis-a-vis the settlers is solidly resisted by the government.

Surely, for the fallen soldier and peacemaker, such a national sense of purpose would be a most fitting tribute.

Hillel Neuer of Montreal writes on political affairs.

Unity that was can bridge the gap of Jewish unity that was felt throughout the Jewish world in the aftermath of Israel's military victory in the Six Day War. Ours is a generation for whom the existence of the State of Israel has always been a reality and is largely taken for granted.

Maybe that is why our generation seems to lack that sense of unity and common identity which existed as the basis of the Jewish people throughout the last 50 years.

The recent tragic event reflects this reality at its worse extreme. Clearly, it is time to do true soul-searching and work to re-establish the sense of unity that is central to the existence of the Jewish people.

Let us be clear; this was the act of one radical extremist, an act which has been condemned across the board, but disassociation and condemnation are not enough. The assassination of the prime minister of the State of Israel by an assailant who professes to be acting by God's will, is not merely a crime like any other. It brings with it great fear concerning a schism and clash between ideologies that will impact on the moral fibre of both the State of Israel and the entire Jewish people. It involves deep concerns about the type of future we are in the process of building for the Jewish people. A calamity of this magnitude requires a serious process of healing.

As our generation assumes the leadership positions of the Jewish community and the Jewish state, we will have to rebuild the unity that once was and bridge the gaps which so bitterly divide us. Only once the internal problems and sense of division are dealt with, can a people move forward to take care of those challenges which it faces from the outside. Let us not give credence to the words of our enemies that war unites the Jews but peace will ignite forces which would cause it to self-destruct.

Now is the time to consciously reflect on what Israel means to each and every one of us. It is a time to come together as a people, to show both ourselves and the world, that unity of purpose does prevail in the land of the Jews. Only then will we be able, once again, to pride ourselves on being a united people, a people who can transcend our political, religious and social differences for the sake of national unity.

'Intolerance we cannot tolerate'

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — "We must learn that we can no more tolerate intolerance from inside the Jewish family than outside it," Judge Rosalie Silberman Abella said recently, referring to the assassination of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

"We must not be afraid to say to those whose insufferable arrogance does not tolerate peace or democracy or civility, it is your intolerance we cannot tolerate, it is your message of hate that threatens Israel's peace and therefore threatens every Jew's peace of mind."

Speaking to 300 people at Beth Radom Synagogue marking the 50th year of liberation, Abella said: "No one knows better than the people in this room that we have already had too many victims. We must do everything we can to make sure there are no more."

There is a link between the Holocaust and the terrible tragedy of Rabin's death, she told the Radom survivors. "We have not come all this way ... to have a few extremists among us dictate the end of the liberal, progressive people we have always prided ourselves on being."

Abella said she considers Holocaust survivors as her personal heroes. The 49-year-old judge of the Ontario Appeal Court was born in Stuttgart, Germany, where Radom survivors and others were housed as displaced persons.

Many at the observance remember Abella as a little girl. Her father, the late Joseph Silberman, a lawyer, was considered the legal guardian angel of the ex-Radomers. Her mother, Fanny, was sitting next to her daughter, as was her husband, Irving, former president of the Canadian Jewish Congress.

Introduced by ex-Radomer Prof. Adam Fuerstenberg, as "a great Canadian and a great Jew," Abella told her audience: "Your roots are the heart of my identity."

The diminutive and casually-dressed judge won the crowd over by moving out from behind the podium and declaring in Yiddish, "Look at my stockings, do I look like a judge?"

In a more serious vein, Abella said Holocaust survivors have the right to hold the world guilty of the crime of attempting to annihilate the Jews.

Among those who welcomed Abella were Nella Gutman Laks, a Toronto social worker, who survived the camps, only to come back to a pogrom in Radom by Poles that resulted in the murder of her first cousin and his bride on their wedding night.

Another was Sam Bresler, president of B'nai Radom, who was so desperate to get a doctor for his father at the end of the war, that he disarmed a German policeman of his pistol, locked a German doctor and his father into a room, and, with pistol in hand, declared to the doctor: "If my father doesn't come out alive, you don't come out alive." His father did come out alive, dying in Israel 20 years later.

Still others were Henry Zagdanski, father of Ian Zagdanski, the evening's chair; Sheldon Friedman, principal of General Studies, at CHAT; Myer Sankiewicz, who worked in a salt mine at Kochendort; Sharon Jesin; a geneticist, and Henry Rosenbaum, who with fellow prisoners, was liberated by a Yiddish-speaking Russian Jew.

"We ran towards him, trying to touch him," Rosenberg said. "It was a moment of glory, of sweet victory."

Kehilla to dedicate new Aron

TORONTO — In conjunction with its 10th anniversary, Kehillat Ahavat Hesed (the Kehilla) will hold a dedication service for its new Aron Kodesh on Nov. 18 at the Zionist Centre, 788 Marlee Ave., beginning at 9:30 a.m.

Two years ago, the Kehilla's board of governors commissioned congregation member and architect George Friedman to design a portable Aron Kodesh with the help of local Jewish artisans.

Besides Friedman, the design team included cabinetmaker Henry Rose, woodcarver Siggi Buhler and fabric artist Rachelle Rubenstein-Kaplan.

Because the Kehilla moves to larger facilities for the High Holy Days and must store the ark when not in use for services, the Aron Kodesh has been uniquely designed for ease of movement, with casters, removable doors and the ability to be divided into two parts.

Consistent with the egalitarian and participatory nature of the congregation, many members contributed their time, encouragement and advice to the project.

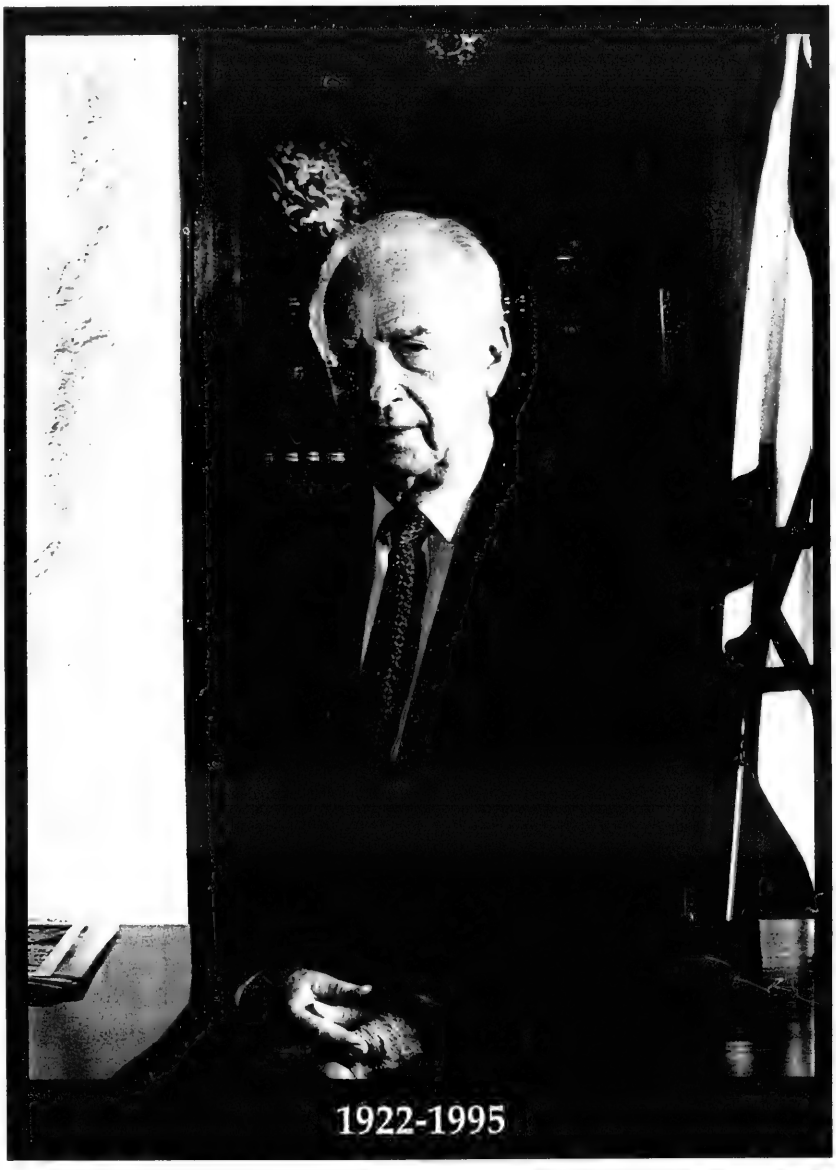
Community leaders reflect on his legacy

Remembering Yitzhak Rabin

By Adi Waksman



Saturday, November 4, 1995. It was a day no one will forget.

Yossi Goldberg was in a Saint John, New Brunswick hotel room with Israeli skater Misha Shmerkin when he learned of Yitzhak Rabin's death. It was just two hours before Shmerkin was scheduled to skate in the Sunlife International competition and the young Olympian, seriously shaken by the news, told Goldberg he didn't think he could go on.

Goldberg, himself still in shock, told the 25 year old: "You will skate in memory of Yitzhak Rabin and for Israel." After convincing officials to allow the Israeli contender to mark a moment of silence before starting his program, Goldberg watched Shmerkin finish second overall.

Goldberg, the mayor of Metulla, where UJA donations helped to build the Canada Centre recreation complex, is a Likud party member who knew Rabin for 34 years. He remembers the close ties Rabin maintained with Israel's most northern town over the last 50 years. "Just one month ago, Rabin cancelled some very important engagements in other parts of the country so that he could join 5,000 soldiers and officers at a celebration in Metulla," Goldberg recalls.

"I am deeply ashamed about what has happened, and I am still in shock to hear that a Jew killed another Jew."

Baruch Gur, the architect of Operation Exodus, who is now a special emissary to United Jewish Appeal and United Israel Appeal in Toronto, recalls accompanying Prime Minister Rabin on a flight carrying Russian olim to Israel last year. "Rabin asked me to walk through the plane with him to talk with the olim. When he finished, he told me that he had always taken for granted that making aliya was easy, but he now realized it is a very difficult and brave decision. He was very touched by the conversations he had."

Victor Yagoda: "He was a great figure during all the different stages of his life."

UJA Campaign Co-chair Charles Gold had the opportunity to participate in an informal conversation with Rabin during a recent Jerusalem dinner. Gold found the Prime Minister to be "very relaxed and at peace with himself and what he was doing."

"Rabin had a lot of friends in Toronto and he had a warm feeling for the community...he was one of the exceptional figures of the century."

Allan Reitzes, Executive Vice President of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto, remarked on how unusual it was for an Israeli Prime Minister to spend close to three hours last month talking with a delegation from Canada.

"It was very meaningful to all of us that he felt so close to our community."

Steve Ain, Executive Vice President of United Israel Appeal Canada, also met Yitzhak Rabin most recently last month. "Throughout his political career, both in and out of office, Rabin always respected the opinions of Jewish communities in the Diaspora. He treated us as partner in an enterprise and never downplayed the importance of world Jewry," says Ain.

Victor Yagoda, Missions Director of UIA Canada describes Rabin as "a great figure during all the different stages of his life."

"The overwhelming reaction of world leadership to his untimely death demonstrates that we have lost a truly great leader."

"We lost one of the best friends of Diaspora Jewry," says Julia Koschitzky, who chairs the Keren Hayesod Board of Trustees. Koschitzky, who sat next to the Prime Minister at the October dinner, recalls Rabin being more animated and at ease than she had ever seen him before. "He was really relaxed around us and seemed to be genuinely having a good time. He spoke about many things including his first trip to Canada as a young officer and about how it was our responsibility to make aliya a priority for our community."

Former UJA Campaign chairman, Allan Offman, spent a great deal of time with Rabin over the last 10 years and found him to be "a totally accessible person who was humble and modest about his background."

Offman drove Rabin around Toronto during a visit in the early 80's and recalls feeling "like I knew him all his life" after only half an hour of conversation. Offman also remembers Rabin's surprised reaction to see the large turnout of people who came to hear him speak at Beth Tzedec synagogue. "He couldn't believe all those people came just to see him."

Julia Koschitzky: "We lost one of the best friends of Diaspora Jewry."

The making of a memorial

North York Parks and Recreation Commissioner Joe Halstead was at home when he got the call from Mayor Mel Lastman at midnight, Saturday, November 4. The Mayor asked for Halstead's help in organizing what turned out to be the largest gathering of Toronto's Jewish community in recent history. Only this time, they were gathering to mourn the death of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin. Over 7,000 people attended.

Even before the intial shock and horror had worn off, leaders of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto and Canadian Jewish Congress, Ontario Region rallied to formulate a coordinated response to the tragic news and begin the process of healing.

After deciding that North York's Centennial Centre would be an appropriate venue, CJC's Executive Director, Ontario Region, Manuel Prutschi, made a call to North York mayor Mel Lastman, asking for his help. "By midnight, the mayor had called me back to tell us that he spoke to the Commissioner and that everything would be taken care of," explained Prutschi.

Meanwhile, Federation officals were grappling with the decision to cancel telethons planned for Sunday and the following two evenings in light of Rabin's death. After conferring with many rabbis, UJA officials in Israel and local staff, the telethons, expected to raise around $2 million, were postponed; the UJA Campaign was extended until December 6 and a briefing for UJA canvassers, featuring Israeli Consul-General Yehudi Kinar, was quickly arranged.

"In the end it was an easy decision", recalled Ted Sokolsky, UJA Campaign Director. "The community needed a break and some time to heal and the memorial was a way that we could all be together."

As soon as the site for the memorial had been chosen, Federation staff and volunteers divided into several committees to take care of logistics. "We were still drilling down the wooden planks to cover the floor as people started to arrive," said the Federation's Avi Benlolo.

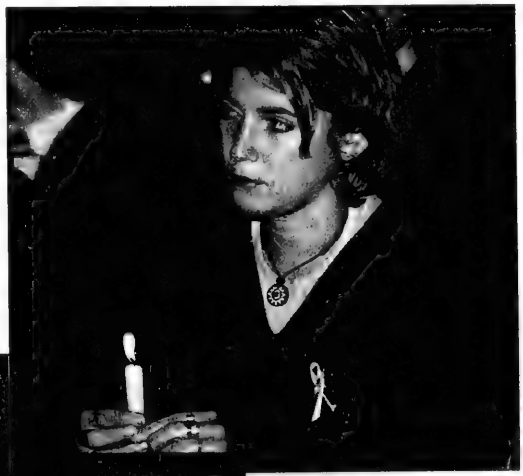
In addition to 500 parking spots behind the arena, an extra few hundred were donated by Branson Hospital and the Esther Shiner Stadium. The owners of Park-it also volunteered to help Federation and Congress direct drivers to parking locations and ensure a safe pathway for pedestrians on their way to the memorial.

Inside the arena, ushers worked diligently throughout the evening guiding people to their seats or standing room areas.

North York Parks and Recreation played a critical role in making the evening a success. "We realized the importance of what we were asked to do so we rolled up our sleeves and went to work," explained North York Parks and Recreation District Supervisor, Malcolm Bromley.

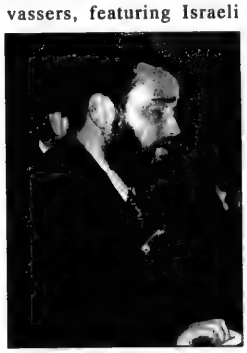
Bromley and Halstead were in charge of preparing the arena and acquiring everything from 2000 extra chairs to 300 sheets of new plywood to cover the floor. "Both my staff and the people from the Federation and CJC were incredibly helpful, many working till 4:00 a.m. Tuesday cleaning up after the memorial," said Bromley. "The evening itself was one of the smoothest functioning events I have ever seen."

"No words can truly reflect our pain," said Federation President Sandra Brown.

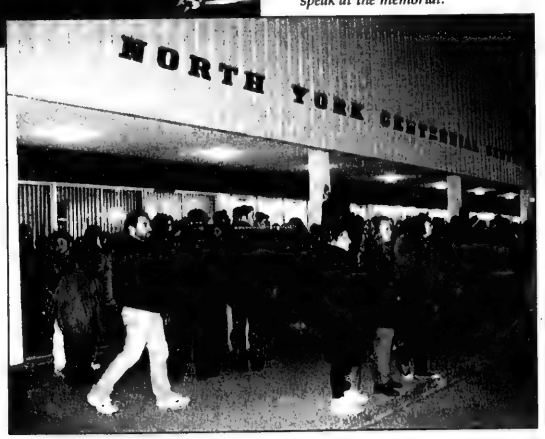


This young woman was one of many whose candles said more than words could express.

Israel's Consul-General Yehudi Kinar returned from Yitzhak Rabin's funeral in Jerusalem to speak at the memorial.



Cantor Shlomo Suffrin concentrates on his prayer for Yitzhak Rabin.



There were 5,000 people inside and another 2,000 outside who could not get in.

UJA's Countdown '96 takes off

Carole Sterling briefs Countdown '96 volunteers the day after Yitzhak Rabin was assassinated.

After a two day delay, dozens of UJA canvassers have been keeping the phone lines burning for seven days during Countdown '96.

The "super week" of fundraising telethons was launched last Tuesday after a postponement following the death of Yitzhak Rabin. UJA decided to proceed with Countdown '96 after consulting community rabbis who recommended that UJA's normal activities should resume. However, canvassers demonstrated sensitivity to those who were still emotionally affected by Prime Minister Rabin's death.

"We didn't press anyone who felt uncomfortable about discussing their pledge during the shiva week for Mr. Rabin. We agreed to call them back," noted Carole Sterling, who, with Richard Sadowski, co-chaired Countdown '96. "Actually, many people were even more pre-disposed to giving," Sterling added. "The Jewish community comes together in times of crisis."

As a sign of respect, bingo games and prize giveaways that were supposed to be conducted during the telethons were cancelled for the shiva period.

With three weeks to go before the Campaign concludes on December 6, card completion is UJA's most important priority. Countdown '96 volunteers contacted thousands of contributors who had not yet pledged. Their donations pushed UJA's Three Year Vision campaign total to more than $57 million. This year, Toronto's United Jewish Appeal became the world's first to seek pledges for three years. So far, nearly 50% of contributors have joined the Three Year Vision.

Although Sterling considers the campaign to be progressing very well, she cautioned that "our community's financial burden has increased dramatically."

"Provincial budget cuts impose a very real impact on our Jewish poor. Simply put, we need more money."

Many Countdown '96 canvassers, who represent community agencies, have a strong stake in the campaign's success. "They're personally affected by the dollars we raise," Sterling said.

UJA's Outlook '96

Greenspan says Simpson verdict a triumph for the system

TORONTO - The U.S. justice system won when O.J. Simpson was acquitted of murder last month, according to renowned Canadian criminal lawyer Eddie Greenspan.

Greenspan offered a prolonged response to a question about the trial's outcome at Outlook '96 for members of UJA's Lawyers and Accountants Division.

"This was a case where reasonable doubt prevailed," he told them. "He was found not guilty. Why was that not a triumph for the system?"

In his other comments on the case, Greenspan said that:

- Detective Mark Furman, who became infamous for his racial slurs, helped to spoil the prosecution's position. "Once one of the officers is unworthy of credit it may cast doubt on the rest of the case."
- Judge Lance Ito did his best to assist the prosecution. "Whenever Judge Ito could make a ruling against the defense he did," Greenspan observed.
- Permitting O.J. Simpson to try on the controversial gloves was a "classic blunder" for the prosecution. "It was one of the stupidest mistakes in the trial."
- DNA testing is neither better nor worse than any other kind of scientific evidence.

During Greenspan's prepared remarks on Defending Evil: The Ethics of Criminal Law, he expressed no hesitation about defending anyone. "I haven't the slightest moral conflict," he stressed, "about defending people accused of murder, sexual assault or even crimes against humanity."

"One's obligation to defend a client does not import any obligation to defend a person's crime," he noted. "My duty is to act for an accused political terrorist, not for political terrorism."

By acting on behalf of an accused individual, Greenspan said a defense lawyer acts on behalf of society as well.

Federation food drive

By Mara Koven

As the poor struggle to digest provincial welfare cuts, the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto is taking action to relieve their hunger.

Food barrels have been placed in the lobby of the Lipa Green Building for donations of kosher, non-perishable items from November 13-30. The goods will be distributed by North York Harvest Food Bank.

"There is a desperate need for food. Those on welfare including the elderly and disadvantaged are going to be severely affected by welfare payment reductions," said Alan Sandler, chair of the Federation's Community Planning & Allocations Department.

A single welfare recipient now receives $520 a month in government social assistance. Agriculture Canada estimates the monthly cost of a nutritious food basket for a single individual in Metro Toronto at approximately $150. That would leave $370 a month for rent and other needs.

"When it comes to paying rent or eating, people will have to pay rent first and buy food later," said Loren Freid, executive director of the North York Harvest Food Bank. "We are anticipating a 40-100% increase in demand in November, December and January."

Nearly a third of the children whose families use the Daily Bread Food Bank go without food at some point, according to the organization's statistics.

The Federation is encouraging contributions of high protein food such as peanut butter, canned fish, juice and baby formula.

The Jewish Federation Food Drive will be open for donations Monday-Thursday 8am-8pm, Friday 8am-3pm and Sunday 10am-5pm. For more information, please call (416) 631-5728.

לאן הגענו :

לו היה ערבי רוצח את יצחק רבין- קרוב לודאי שתהליך השלום היה נפסק, או נעצר לזמן משמעותי. אנשי הימין היו מנופפים ידיהם ואומרים " אמרנו לכם", ואנשי השמאל והמרכז היו מהססים. לו היה ראש הממשלה נרצח בידי יהודי אמריקני קיצוני, דוגמת ברוך גולדשטיין - היתה הציבוריות הישראלית מרחיקה את עצמה עוד יותר מתנועת ההתנחלות בגדה המערבית. אבל השוק הגדול ביותר בכל הסיפור הוא שמדובר בנער שנולד בארץ, לאם גננת ולאב סופר סת"ם, ושלמד משפטים באוניברסיטת בר-אילן. מכריו אומרים שלא הסתיר את דיעותיו וכי יש עוד שכמותו באוניברסיטאות ישראל ובריחבותיה. ווה הזעזוע האמיתי: שארץ ישראל של שנות התשעים יוצרת פאשיסטים משיחיים יהודיים צברים, התשובה הישראלית לתאמאס ולגייחד. האם זה מפתיע או ניתן לחיזוי? בואו לא נהיה תמימים! רמת האלימות בחברה הישראלית, הן האלימות המילולית והן המעשית נמצאת בעליה מתמדת. לפני מספר חודשים נשאל יצחק רבין האם הוא חושש לחייו מקיצוניים, והוא ענה: אחרי כל מה שעברתי בצבא קשה להפחיד אותי. וזהי תשובתו האמיצה של אחד המנהיגים החשובים ביותר בהיסטוריה היהודית, ותשובתו דומה לדברי יוליוס קיסר: "האמיצים מתים פעם אחת בחיים בעוד שהפחדנים מתים כל יום".

מאחר ויהודי רצח את יצחק רבין- יואך תהליך השלום ויקבל משנה תוקף, יתרה מכך - הרוצח ישיג את היפוך מטרתו, ובבחירות הבאות (רשמו נא לפניכם!) תזכה מפלגת העבודה, משום שאין סיכוי ש 15-20 האחוזים שמהססים יצביעו עבור הימין. ולא יעזור לבניימין נתניהו שמן הזית ושמן הקיק שהוא נוסך בדברי הצער שלו על רבין. העבדה היא שהוא נאם באופן קבוע לפני ציבור שמראה בובות של יצחק רבין לבושות בבגדי אֶס אֶס ועליהן שלט "רבין רוצח" . לא שמעתי עדיין שהוא לא הסכים להשתתף בכנס שמוצגים בו סמלים כאלה! לו אני יועץ התעמולה של מפלגת העבודה בבחירות הייתי מראה רק קטע קטן של נתניהו נאם וברקע בובת יצחק רבין בבגדי אֶס אֶס! תמונה כזו מספיקה להעביר צמרמורת בכל ישראלי שפוי לעוד דור שלם! שישאר בינינו: על שינאת אחים כזו חרב בית המקדש!

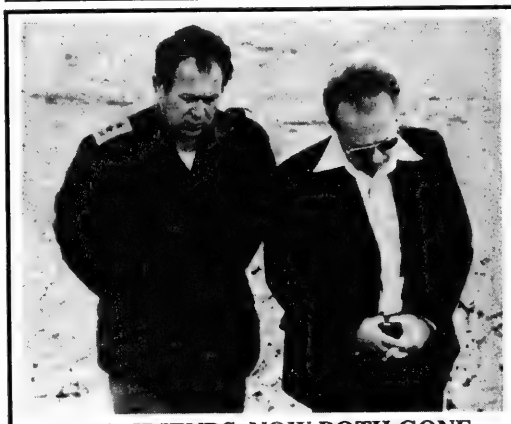
מכל מעגלי היסורים שיצר הרוצח היהודי, עולים בדעתי דווקא אימו ואביו, גרוב אחיו ואחיותיו, ועשרות בני דודו וילדיהם, ודודותיו וגיסותיו, מעגלים מעגלים של מאות אנשים ישרים וטובים שהוא טימא לדורות. אנשים שיכנסו להיסטוריה כבני משפחתו של רוצח המנהיג על שהביא שלום! מעכשיו ולמשך עשרות שנים יצביעו עליהם בעוברם ברחוב, וילחשו אחרי גבם מילים קשות. איזה עונש נורא על לא עוול בכפם! קשה לי להאמין שהסטודנט למשפטים לא חשב על כל זה טרם עשה את מעשהו הנורא. וזה מוכיח עוד יותר את כוחה המהפנט של המשיחיות הקיצונית של הגייהד היהודי, אין אבא ואין אמא, המטרה מקדשת כל אמצעי.

"שלום חבר":

כך, בעברית, בדמעות, נפרד הנשיא קלינטון מיצחק רבין. וכל ישראלי ויהודי שראה אותו בצערו - עלו דמעות גם בעיניו. לא רק על הצער האישי על מותו של מנהיג דגול, אלא גם בהתרגשות על צערם של אנשים רבים כל כך בעולם על מה שקרה לישראל. וזה אולי מקור הסוד של רבין: הוא הצליח להחזיר את ישראל המבודדת לקהילה הבינלאומית בכך שעבר את קפיצת הדרך הבלתי אפשרית כדי להגיע להידברות עם טרוריסטים ערביים. ישראל היא דמוקרטיה חזקה, ואין איש שאין לא תחליף. את משא השלום ימשיכו ויביאו להשלמה שמעון פרס, יוסי שריד, אהוד ברק, אפרים סנה ועוד רבים וטובים.

מעולם לא הסכים יצחק רבין לשיר בפומבי. והינה בעצרת השלום האחרונה שכנעו אותו לשיר את "שיר לשלום" מדף נייר. ראיתי אותו שר, מבויש מעט כי היה איש סגור וביישן, אחר כך קיפל את הדף ושם בכיס החליפה. לאחר מותו נמצא הדף מוכתם בדם, ואיתן הבר הקריא ממנו את "שיר השלום". אבל כדברי שמעון פרס: " אפשר לפגוע באדם, ובשיר, אך לא ברעיון הנשגב של השלום,"



TWO FRIENDS, NOW BOTH GONE

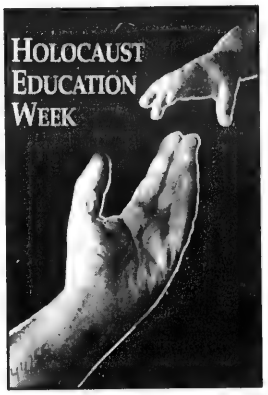
UN sets wheels in motion to establish int'l court

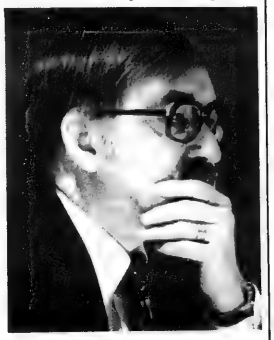


By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The bureaucratic wheels are in motion at the United Nations (UN) towards establishing a permanent international criminal court to prosecute alleged war criminals, a prominent Canadian jurist said last week.

A draft document outlining an international convention that would form the basis of the international court will be discussed at the UN's fall 1996 session and could well be approved, said Justice Jules Deschenes.

Deschenes, who headed a 1985-86 inquiry into Nazi war criminals in Canada, said such a court would serve as a signal that war criminals cannot escape the consequences of their action. It would also serve as a tribute to those who convened at Nuremberg following World War II to prosecute Nazi war criminals. Canada, he added, has fully endorsed the initiative and is "spearheading" it.



Justice Jules Deschenes

Speaking at a luncheon that was part of the 15th annual Holocaust Education Week, Deschenes pointed out that he is currently participating in a UN-established international criminal court to deal with war criminals from the former Yugoslavia.

That court is "a step in the direction of a permanent court," he said.

The court was established in a relatively brief nine-month span by the UN and includes 11 judges from around the world. Deschenes said he is one of two from North America, while Africa and Europe are each represented by two judges, Asia has three, and Latin America and Australia are each represented by a single judge.

The jurists have established a 125-article code containing rules on procedure and evidence.

A 24-cell jail has been established in a suburb of The Hague, Holland but it currently has only one occupant.

Altogether, 43 individuals have been indicted by the court's prosecutor's office. The 42 remaining individuals are being protected by their national governments. The alleged war criminals hail from either Serbia-Montenegro or from Serb-controlled Bosnia, he said, and they include the top leadership of Serb-held Bosnia.

Both those governments refuse to recognize the court's jurisdiction and while the court does not have a police unit to arrest them, it has other recourse. It can publicize their crimes and issue an international warrant for their arrest, Deschenes said.

While that wouldn't lead to their arrests, it would make them prisoners of their countries subject to arrest if they leave its borders, he said.

Reviewing the Canadian experience, Deschenes said the federal government seems to be moving now towards the second of the recomendations contained in his 1986 report. At the time, he urged government lawmakers to consider both criminal sanctions and the removal of citizenship followed by deportation of Nazi war criminals.

After failing with four criminal prosecutions and succeeding in deporting Jacob Luitjens to Holland, the government seems to have settled on the denaturalization/deportation route, he said.

Deschenes' address was sponsored by the Jewish Civil Rights Educational Foundation of Canada.

Survivor's story opens Holocaust Education Week

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Faye Schulman's ladylike demeanor offers no hint of the wartime horrors she remembers, nor of her former exploits as a partisan.

The septuagenarian Toronto grandmother, who survived the Holocaust with the help of luck, sound instincts and photographic skills useful to the Nazis, drew a standing room only crowd to the Leah Posluns Theatre last week for the opening night program of Holocaust Education Week.

Schulman's talk was also part of the annual Jewish Book Fair, which coincided with the launch of her book A Partisan's Memoir, Woman of the Holocaust.

Although Schulman's hometown of Lenin in eastern Poland no longer exists, her talk brought the town back to life for a rapt audience.

Lenin's 5,000-member Jewish community — approximately half the town's population — was like a big family, she said. Before the war, local Jews lived in harmony with their non-Jewish neighbors.

With the advent of Nazism and the onset of war between Germany and Russia, which had occupied that part of Poland, the horrors began.

Indicating a portrait of a young couple and their 6-month-old twin boys, Schulman related their shocking fate. "The Nazis took the twins outside. They tore the twins apart — an arm, a leg — and one Nazi threw them into the air while the other was shooting. This is how they enjoyed themselves."

In August 1942, those Jews remaining in Lenin were assembled and shot dead in three trenches. Only Schulman, then a teenager, and five families were spared.

Schulman witnessed the massacre from an attic window of the town's synagogue and was later forced to develop Nazi photos of the scene.
